Dr. E. M. Patterson testified that Boogar left property that required immediate attention of the administrators. Attorney M. C. Charpman stated on the witnessistand that Boogar had sent for him on the morning of January 9, and asked him to get some papers and the will from the bank. He gave him an order. The documents were brought to Boogar's room and he was shown the will. As he had a case in court, Chapman took the papers to the courtroom, and returned them to the bank at noon. Meantime, or about this time, Boogar died. The bank now refuses to surrender them to him.

After some discussion Judge Frick refused to grant special letters of administration, upon the grounds that the showing had not made clear that any interest of the estate required this issue. The Coroner then consculted the District Attorney, who advised him to recognize the request of the widow, who had given Undertaker Evers an order for the body. On this the remains were turned over, and the funeral will take place from the house

Some of Them Furthermore Would Take a Whack at the Counties With Their Cleaver-The Committee Question.

By Telegraph to The Times.

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 12.—(Special Dispatch.) There can be no question that many legislators from the southern part of the State are champions of State division. They explained their reasons today. They consider that they have been unfairly treated in the distribution of offices. The defeat of Judge Torrance for the Supreme bench rankles and makes them bitter. Ever since these southern representatives came to the capital city they have been canvassing the situation to see where their hobby rested. They have been even projecting their quarrel into the United States Senatorial fight, and it is said on excellent authority that Senator Perkins will receive some of his southern support because southern legislators believe because southern legislators him to be their advocate. A strong ally of the State division ists is found in the contingent which ecks to divide the counties of the State. Several such schemes have already been planned. The proposed division of Tulare county and the creation of the county of Putnam has already been noted. Some of the people of San Luis Obispo are here planning division upon such terms that a stubborn fight is inevitable. With stubborn fight is inevitable. With Tulare and San Luis in the field, Santa Barbara is likely to prove an active competitor. County quarrels and the demands of growing cities have prompted the scheme for division in this county. The time of demarkation would leave only a narrow strip of territory to Santa Barbara and already there is war in the air. In addition to this disadvantage, three different towns are fighting for the honor of county seat.

three different towns are fighting for the honor of county seat.

Under certain conditions San Diego representatives may ask for division and the formation of the new county of San Luis Rey. San Diego is pri-marily interested, however, in the county government act. The greatest confusion prevails in San Diego be cause of the creation of the county of Riverside, which left the administra-tion of the county in wretched state Riverside, which left the administra-tion of the county in wretched state. When Riverside was created the pop-ulation of San Diego remained be-tween 30,000 and 32,000. There is in the constitution no provision for the government of a city of that size. The classified arrangement of cities does not provide for it and it has been necessary to conduct the government necessary to conduct the government on general laws. The result has been much confusion. Withington will present a bill in the Senate and Guy in the Assembly to remedy the evil and create new class of cities known as No. 8½. In project of county division it is likely that anything definite will done this session. The people of the city of San Diego are determined to see the establishment of the city and county in which National City, Corocard San Diego will be consolinado and San Diego will be consoli-dated. In the present scheme to di-vide the county this hope is neglected and opposition has been the result.

THE COMING WEEK'S WORK. SACRAMENTO Jan. 12.-The legis lative halls and the resorts of the politicians are all but deserted. WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The meeting of the Senate Finance Committee today was devoted to a discussion of the Vest and McPherson financial bilis presented resterday. No action was taken. The complete adjourned until Monday, when it expected that Senator Jones will have bill to be considered. It was stated that the prospects of financial legislation have not been brightened materially by today's meeting.

A CINCIE ON 'EM. WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. -Senator Goreral Senators, said: "The defeat of the appropriation will not defeat the collection of the income tax. Under sec. 29, all persons and corporations with incomes above 45500 are required to make returns according to the form prescribed by the Revenue Department to the Secretary of the Treasury. Those who hope to escape payment of the income tax through the failure of Congress to make the appropriation asked for and who are thus led to negliect making returns at the time fixed by law will find themselves involved in 50 per cent. heavier taxes and will be compelled to pay them."

FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.-SENATE.ne galleries were fairly well filled today anticipation of a speech by Senator Corman on the currency question, in which it was thought that he would propose some solution of the problem from the Senate standpoint. Senator Quay spread before him on the desk a roll of manuscript, which looked like the formulable of the senator of the problem. and carefully-prepared speeches or which he is noted. Senator Cockrell called up the Urgent Senator Cockrell called up the Urgent Deficiency Bill. The presiding officer, Senator Harris, explained the parliamentary situation coming over from yesterday. Senator Hill offered an amendment to the item for the appropriation of runis for the collection of the income tax, so that the legality of the tax might be referred to the courts. The chair had ruled out the amendment on a point of order. Senator Hill appealed from the decision of the chair, and Senator Morgan moved to lay the appeal on the table, in order to permit the Senators to further discuss the income tax. Senator Morgan moved to lay the appeal on the table, in order to permit the Senators to further discuss the income tax. Senator Morgan finally agreed to withdraw his motion.

Senator Teller then addressed the Senate in support of a continuance of the income tax. He pointed to the large treasury deficits which had been temporarily met by bond issues. The gold supply was down to $77,000,000, and was so rapidly disappearing. Any proposition to do away with the income tax, therefore, should be accompanied by a plan to raise the revenues the government required. He gave it as his opinion that the income tax would become permanent, even though it was limited to five years by the present law. He believed that it was such an equitable tax that the people would insist upon its continuance.

The import duties could not be put so

The import duties could not be put so high as to entirely keep out the goods, and without these high duties, there was certain to be a deficit. It was essential, therefore, that some middle course should be adopted and the income tax was the most just means of taking this course. Senator Teller spoke of the vain and fruitless efforts of the executive branch of government, "to do something to relieve the present distress of the government and people."

"It shows," said the Senator, " that the "It shows," said the Senator, " that the executive branch is in wrong hands." Senator Teller spoke caustically of the scheme of banking coming from the Treasury Department." He referred to the current reports that the bill had been outted off in thirty minutes to a stenographer. "I wish to show all due respect to this bill," said Semator Teller, "coming, as it does, from such high sources, but if such a measure came from any Senator or member—"If it came from any Populist. it

Although his side was not charged with the responsibility for the present situation, he, for one, would join with his political adversaries in any scheme of redief that appealed to his judgment. But he had little hope, when he saw the Sentie of the United States confronted by such a situation, supinely awaiting to see what Europe would do. It was deplorable and disgraceful. A change of administration might aid matters, but he doubted it. The last Republican administration was voted out of power, and he believed it deserved defeat.

Last fail the people had overthrown the Democratic majority in the House because the Democratic party had shown itself incapable of dealing with problems before it. As for the Populist party, he did not believe it ever would be a party of power and therefore he believed it would devolve on either the Republican or the Democratic party to solve the problems oventually when the pressure of the people would about the problems oventually when the pressure of the people would about the problems oventually when the pressure of the people would about the problems oventually when the pressure of the people of the monetary problem. peal to those on the other side of the chamber to present a solution of the existing problem which would not surrender silver. It should be no makeshift, no temporary expedient, but it should be ample to avert a crisis more dangerous to the American people than even war.

Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts spoke of the danger of arresting appropriations and thus killing law by stagnation. He did not therefore approve of refusing the appropriation necessary to execute the income tax. The imposition of a direct income tax was the necessary result of abandoning the protective policy of indirect taxes. He referred to the present cry for currency legislation as the move intended to cover up the most dismal failure in tariff legislation the country had ever seen. The first step to take to overcome the distress of the treasury was to raise more revenue. None of these schemes could pass. But if the one essential thing was done, more revenue secured for the treasury, he and his associates would gladly assist in passing a measure was imperative, instead of any more such bills as the one "just kicked to death" in the House of Representatives.

HOUSE.—Abous twenty members crowded into the area in front of the Speaker's rostrum, at the opening of the House today, in hopes of getting bills of local importance through by unantmous consent, but all were unsuccessful. Mr. Hatch, chairman of the Committée on Agriculture, called up the bill to extend the provisions of the Wilson original-package liquor law to oleomargarine in the original package.

The Wilson bill covered distilled and formented liquors in original packages, but, by a decision of the Supreme Court, rendered by Justice Harlan, December 19, it was decided that oleomargarine should be disported into a State in original packages and sold free of tax. This bill was to make the law uniform as regards distilled liquors and imitation butter. It completed the effectiveness of the police powers of the States by authorizing them to exercise their police powers over oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter or imitation cheese imported in original packages, as if they had been manufactured in the States where they are consumed.

The bill precipitated a discussion regard-

The bill precipitated a discussion regarding the merits of the oleomargarine clause and its constitutionality. It was partici-pated in by Messrs. Williams of Mississippi, and its constitutionality. It was participated in by Messrs. Williams of Mississippi, Warner of New York, Forman of Hilmois, and Grout of New Hampshire.

Mr. Hatch attempted to have the extra hour, to which the bill would be entitled under the rule when the committee is again called, granted at this time, but his request was refused. He then tried to have the previous question ordered, but fillbustering of Mr. Bynum consumed the time until the morning hour had expired, and the bill was passed.

Shortly before 2 o'clock public business was suspended, and eutogies were heard on the late Representative George B. Shaw of Wisconsin. Tributes were gald by Mr. Shaw's successor, Mr. Griffin, and by Messrs. Lynch, Democrat, of Wisconsin; Babcock, Republican, of Wisconsin; Babcock, Republican, of Wisconsin; Babcock, Republican, of Iowa; Ellis, Republican, of Iowa; Ellis, Republican, of Iowa; Cannon, Republican, of Illinois; and Haughen, Republican, of Wisconsin. Then, as a further mark of respect, the House, at 3:55 p.m., adjourned.

Detective Labell of Chicago Asks an Accounting in the Interest of a San Quentin Prisoner and Himself.

By Telegraph to The Times. CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—(Special Dispatch.) Joseph H. Lobell, a private detective, today, in the Superior Court, filed a bill against the administrator and heirs of the estate of Alonzo C. Wood, whose will is now being litigated. Wood died in March, leaving about $10,000 of property. Frederick L. Wood, a son, is a life convict in San Quentin Prison in California. Lobell claims that three months after the death of the elder Wood he agreed with the convict son to recover the latter's share by suit or otherwise, and take for his work one-half. He asks the court to order an accounting in order that the amount due Frederick may be set aside. The will was recently declared void and, if this decision is sustained, the convict will be entitled to one-seventh in

An Aged Spouse Secures a Divorce from Her Husband

Associated Press Leased-wire Service.

HARRISONVILLE (Mo.,) Jan. 12.—The Cass County Circuit Court has just adjourned after having granted an unusually Journed atter having granted an unusually large number of divorces.

A rather unusual case was in the suit of Mrs. Eliz Mohney against John Mohney, a farmer. The defendant was 67 years of age and his wife blushingly insisted that she was but 66. In her petition she charged desertion and non-support, but in the hearing of the testimony it was admitted that this was alleged merely as a formality, it having been agreed between formality, it having been agreed between the two that the wife should bring suit and that the defendant would not contest, it. Mohney said he was married in...1850 and that there were ten children born. The ten were in the courtroogs as witnesses for their mother. Mrs. Mohney said that for twenty-five or thirty years her husband was a model and they got along together beautifully. "But," she went on, "after that he got finicky and would take spells when he would desert me. We quarreled all the time. I do not say he was to blame for these quarrels all the time, for I had a big family and could not be honeying around him from morning to night, but it was his fault most of the time."

When all the evidence was in Judge Wood said that, from a legal standpoint, he would be compelled to grant the divorce, but much against his will. In handing down the decree, he scored the old couple severely to which they listened with placid indifference.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—With the crucifix of his rosary pressed to his lips in prayer, James Conley, known as the "Hermit of St.—Marys." died last night in the basement of the church at Eldridge Court and Wabash avenue.

For almost a quarter of a century Conley had lived in the little tower of the church, ate but one meal a day, and all that time never tasted meat. Before the great fire of 1871 Conley was a porter in the Grand Pacific Hotel and a regular attendant at St. Mary's Church. The church was destroyed with the rest of the buildings of that part of the city, When it was rebuilt Conley took up his abode in the tower and no one has ever been in that apartment except Conley.

A Public Announcement that the Chinese Emperor Has Sued for Peace—Minister Kurino on the Subject.

TOKIO, Dec. 29.—(Associated Press Correspondence, wired from San Francisco January 12.) The Japanese government has publicly announced that the Emperor of Chira has signified his desire to terminate the war and has appointed one of of Chima has signified his desire to terminate the war, and has appointed one of the members of the Tsung-Li-Yamen of the highest official rank, named Chang-Ying-Hwan, to proceed to Japan and arrange terms of peace. The Japanese were by no means sure that China was acting in good faith, and they still have doubts as to her sincerity. In any case, they are far from being confident that the first negotiations will progress satisfactorily. It may even be said that they more than anticipate the possibility of a failure to agree.

It was not with absolute unan It was not with absolute unanimity that the Japanese authorities consented to receive a suppliant for peace at this juncture. The cooler heads in the Cabinet have for some time been favorable to a speedy suspension of hostilities, and Count Ito, and Viscount Mutsu, who lead the ministry intellectually, would be ready to conclude a peace at once with Changy Ying-Hwan, on terms which; while honorable to their own country, would not be considered illiferal to the enemy. But the war party is represented to some the war party is represented to a extent in the administration, and its

the war party is represented to some extent in the administration, and its influence is much too powerful to be disregarded, or, for the present, held in control. Many of the military leaders look upon China's submissive proposals as a mere incident of the struggle, which will not be permitted to impede the advance of the army, or prevent the occupation of Peking.

The government means to act candidly and straightforwardly. If the Chinese commissioner is authorized to treat on the basis which the conquerors consider indispensable, a settlement may be made without excessive delay; but the Japanese do not now think it probable that he will accede to their conditions or come anywhere near them. That he will not do so is the scarcely-concealed hope of the military leaders; and with the uncertainty of the Cabinet on the one hand and on the other the determination of the army and navy and their powerful supporters that the fighting shall go on until a heavier chastisement shall by we been inflicted, it would be premature to assume positively that all warlike operations are about to end.

The Japanese Parliament, after organizing on December 24, listened to the reading of the Emperor's speech by Count ito. On the 25th the replies of both houses were voted and an adjournment was taken over the holidays, to January 8.

Subscriptions to the second war loan are close upon 100,000,000 yen, or nearly double the amount called for.

is the only case which has been decided in favor of the Dubs faction throughout the country.

The suit which, on its face, is a simple foreclosure suft brought by Maria Hummel to recover a loan of $6000 to the Adamssireet church, has developed into a big church fight. In the trial of the case the foreclosure portion of it has become a mere incident. The real fight was between four of the original trustees and a fifth one for the title of the church property. This action was first based on a subscription made in 1885 toward the purchase of the church property for the society. Five men of the church made up a subscription aggregating $4000 toward the purchase of the church site, which was bought for $8500. These men were afterwards Esher followers and Thomas I. Haynes, who has done all the fighting in the present case for the church, who became a Dubs follower.

Mrs. Hummel's loan of $6000 was on property deeded to the society, and when she attempted to foreclose, the Esher faction put in a claim on the property which was fought by Haynes. Judge Payne decided in favor of Haynes, declaring that the title was properly vested in him, subject to the payment of Mrs. Hummel's claim.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Senators Hill and Platt, sitting as a sub-committe of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, to-day heard the statements of Mr. McAdoo in substantiation of his charges against Hon. C. D. Clark, the nominee for the office of District Judge in the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, and also statements by Messrs. W. H. Barr, who is McAdoo's law partner, and Attorney McClure, partner in the law firm of Turner, McClure & Ralston, who appeared for the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. These witnesses were all opposed to Clark, who was represented at the hearing by his law partner, Hon. Foster V. Brown end by other friends, though not present himself. The charge made is that of unprofessional conduct growing out of the case of W. D. Davis vs. the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, in which the firm of Clark & Brown are alleged to have assumed to appear for both sides of the controversy. There was an allowance to the firm in this matter, which is criticized by the parties making the charges as a gross fraud which no court of conscience would countenance, and the conduct of the firm characterized as a breach of professional ethics, which cannot be too severely condemned. The friends of Judge Clark, who are present, have presented the members of the committee copies of the opinions of Judges Lurton and Key, before whom these charges were officially made, entirely enomerating the firm, and making their decease entirely upon the line on which

Mr. Mc-Adoo's friends are directing their plea dependently toward prevailing upon the committee to accept new testimony, and not to depend entirely upon the record of the Tennessee court proceedings against Judge Clark. Trainmen Bound and Gagged by the Two Nervy Desper-adoes.

The Haul Made by Them is Thought to be About Eight Thousand Dollars—Theory that They are Moonshiners.

OMAHA (Neb.) Jan. 12.—A special to the Bee from Ottumwa, Iowa, says that highwaymen got in their work tonight. It was one of the most daring train-robnear Ottumwa. No. 4 is the Burlington's through passenger train from Denver to Chicago, and carries large quantities of mail and baggage. It was not known that the train carried a more valuable cargo of mail or express tonight than usual, or if it did, it was kept quiet, but it seems that two bold robbers knew that the express would make a valuable haul, and they planned to bag it. They held up the train, but molested nothing but the express car, though, after they had finished the total for ten minutes and this job, they stood for ten minutes and waited for the train to stop long enough to have robbed the mail cars or the pas-to have robbed the mail cars or the passenger coaches.

The agent at Chillicothe, a small village several miles west of here, says that he saw two men about the depot in the afterneon, and, when No. 4 arrived at 6:30 o'clock p.m., they were on the platform, but disappeared while the train was standing at the station. When the heavy string of cars began to move out of the station, the two express messengers and baggagemen shut the side doors of the car, for the wind was blowing strong and cold. Ex-

the two express messengers and baggagemen shut the side doors of the car, for the wind was blowing strong and cold. Express Messenger Page stepped to the end door at the front of the car, which, though usually secured and fastened, was left unlocked by some one passing through it. He meant to lock it, and was just stopping to do it when the door opened and the two men sprang inside. They cried: "Held up your hands!" one running to the rear of the car to cover the assistant and baggageman, Ed Wright. The trainmen, taken by surprise, threw up their hands.

The robbers compelled them to "bunch" in a corner of the car and one kept them covered with two big pistols while the other bound and gagged them. He then turned his attention to the safe, which he unlocked with the keys taken from Page's pockets, stuffing the contents into a big sack which they had with them. At this point a mail cterk in the adjoining spartment came in attracted by the noise and he immediately received the bind and gag treatment and was thrown in the corner with the others. After filling the sack, the robbers quietly awaited until the train whistled and slackened speed for the Milwaukee Railroad crossing, a mile west of town showing he veery action a perfect the robbers quietly awaited until the train whistled and slackened speed for the Milwaukee Railroad crossing, a mile west of town, showing by every action a perfect familiarity with the lay of the land and habits of the train. When the train stopped for the crossing they both jumped to the door, sprang out and started on a run across the Des Moines River.

By this time the baggageman had worked himself loose from the thongs which bound him and he released his companions, just as the train was pulling into the Oftumwa depot. The alarm was given and an engine with a posse sent out to Chillicothe, where no night agent is retained by the company. Another posse was led by a Burlington detective, Jim Harrison, who recently had a desperate fight with bandits at Batavia, in which one was killed. This one started from Ottumwa, and the search for the robbers was a hasty one. It is believed that they escaped to an island in the river, from where it is thought that they crossed to the opposite side of the river and escaped by horses hidden in the woods. The robbers were medium-sized men. They wore caps, with drop masks to them. One had on gray Jeans, and the other overalls, and both wore brown overcoats. The trainmen think that, from the coolness displayed by the bandits, that they are old hands at the business, probably recently from the Territory, who

Local officials at a late hour estimated the amount taken at $8000. But, on account of it being a habit of banks in small towns to send money to Chicago on Saturday night, it is believed the amount is much larger. THE USUAL CLAIM.

The talk was purely informal and took a broad range, the subject being dis-cussed from an international point of view cussed from an international point of view as well as an economic proposition. One objection to the scheme which seemed to strike the conference with some force was the suggestion that any dammed river would be sure to fill up gradually from the deposit of soil brought down from the mountain head-waters and so the supply of water for irrigation would diminish and in the end serious controversies would arise over its distribution. The subject will be further discussed before any attempt is made to reach a conclusion.

ILLEGAL DIVORCES.

SENSATIONAL CHARGES SPRUNG IN COLORADO.

Officials of Cheyenne County Guilty of Crooked Work-Disbarment and Criminal Proceedings to be Instituted.

DENVER, (Colo.,) Jan. 12.—Representative Pease, elected in November, makes serious charges against the county officials in Cheyenne county at the east end of the State. He alleges that several hundred illegal divorce have been granted, and has placed the matter in the hands of A. B. Mc-Kinley, one of the most prominent attorneys in the State, to be prepared for presentation to the Legislature. Investigation has been in progress during the past week or two and has resulted in the disclosure of many very sensational facts. Cheyenne Wells is the seat of Cheyenne county and is in Colorado, seventeen miles west of the Kansas boundary, being on the line of the Kansas Pacific. Ac cording to the evidence gathered, the county government has been for several years in the hands of six men. all of whom were aware of the di-vorce-court traffic. The clique had a House of Representatives in the Colorado Legislature, and it is through his efforts that the investigation was taken up against the remaining four. The County Judge has a law office in Denver, sharing his quarters with C. H. Farrall. Farrall is the local attorney of the Union Pacific Railroad attorney of the Union Pacific Railroad and was County Attorney until Tuesday last, and was Deputy District Attorney of the county in the Fourth Judicial district, under District Attorney Cochran of Colorado Springs. In one case, that of Lafayette Gardner vs. Marietta Gardner, suit was instituted August 18, 1894, and determined Voyantes 10, 1000 CF. termined November 10, 1894. There is nothing in the court files regarding the case except a complaint not sworn to and an affidavit giving Mrs. Gard-ner's residence as Schenectady; N. Y., and a summons which was never falling out, two of the party desert-ing the others politically. One of these was elected in November to the erved. The weekly paper in the town did not publish the summons. It is claimed that in most of these divorce cases, not even where default was made, that no jury was empanelled. There are but one or two hundred people in Cheyenne county, not half so many as the number of divorces granted, and, according to residents of Cheyenne Wells, not over one or two divorce suits have ever been in-stituted by residents of the county. If is also alleged that the divorce-brokers have agencies in other towns than Denver, where business drummed up.

Proceedings for the disbarment of Judge Slattery and Lawyer Farrall will be instituted before the lower house of the Legislature at once. It is also intended to commence criminal proceedings, and it is alleged that enough evidence is in the hands of the authorities to send all four of the parties to the penitentiary.

Emperor William in Favor of Assisting Husbandry—His Idea of a May—A Gift of Flowers for Bismarck

ted Press Leased-wire Service

Associated Press Leased-wire Service.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—(By Atlantic Cable. Associated Press, Copyright, 1895.) It was announced this afternoon that the Chancellor, Prince Hohenlohe, will start tomorrow on his long-talked-of visit to Prince Bismarck, who is now at Friedrichsruhe, This visit has been postponed during the Christmas recess, owing to the fact that Prince Hohenlohe has been cuffering from an acuate attack of neuralgia in the face. Prince Bismarck, in spite of his interesting for the companies of the Princes, his wife, remains in fair health. The reports published in some newspapers that his mental powers are falling are quite unfounded.

Count Von Moltke, aide-de-camp est the Emperor, returned to Berlin today, after accomplishing the imperial mission, presenting Prince Bismarck with a gift of flowers, yesterday being the annivorsary of the Prince's memorable speech in the Reichstag advocating an increase of the strength of the German army. The Emperor's aide-de-camp brought back from Friedrichsruhe a letter in which Prince Bismarck heartily thanked the Emperon and expressed great regret that the state of his health prevented his coming to Berlin in person. A certain newspaper of Berlin in the Bismarck at Schoenhausen at the beginning of March. This and expressed great regret that the state of his health prevented his coming to Berlin in person. A certain newspaper of Berlin in person. It was rumored today that the Minister of Commerce, Freiherr von Berlepsch, is about to resign, and that he will be succeeded by Herr Studt, Governor of Westphalia. The imperial Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Minister of State has the same intentions, and Count Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenberg, the German ambassador at London, is spoken of as his successor. The position of Dr. Carl Von Boettleher, vice-president of the Prussian Council of Ministers, and the imperial Secretary of State for the government is also declared to be shaken. These resolutions, in view of what is credibly said to have occurred at the Cabinet council early this week, need not cause surprise. During the debate on the Anti-Revolution Bill in the Reichstag on Tuesday, Prince Hohenlohe presided at a meeting of the Ministry and the question of dissolving the Reichstag was for the first time openly discussed at the instance of the Chancellor. Dr. Von Boettloher, who, like Frieherr van Bieberstein, has thus far not lifted up a finger on behalf of the passage of the bill, declared that it was his conviction that the measure was sure of being defeated in the Reichstag. Frieherr von Bieberstein expressed the same opinion, and hence the reports of further changes in the ministry. The statements of the members of the Centre party during the debate on the Anti-Revolution Bill bear out the previous understanding that the support of the Centrists in the attempt to pass the measure will only be given if sme government appears now to be pretty certain in view of the unterance of the Emperor during the last few days and other incidents.

It is a significant fact, in connection with the Agrarian question, that the Agrarian leader, Count von Morbach, whose name it will be remembered was struck from the list of the Emperor's guests at the banquet at Konigsburg, last autumn, has just issued an electoral address in which he says that he was greatly pleased during his recent stay in Berlin now convinced that only by working in unison with the views of the Conservative party can they accomplish any good for the Fatherland.

The following remark is attributed to the Emperor and is said to have been ut-tered by him during the course of the address which he delivered on the German navy last Tuesday, when he repre-sented to his hearers that, in view of the fact that the German merchant marine the fact that the German merchant marine was now the second largest in the world, the German navy should be increased by a number of fast cruisers. He is quoted as saying: "As my grandfather made the army what it is, so I want to make the German navy great." The drawing or map, with which Emperor William illustrates his speech on the navy has been deposited among the archives of the Prussian Diet.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 9.—(To the Editor of The Times:) Is it too much to ask you to explain to a woman who understands lit-tle about mechanics, upon what newly-dis-covered principle of philosophy our High School is now heated, or kept from being heated? In my schools days I learned that hot air is lighter than cold and ascends, and at this late day I recall with gratificahot air is lighter than coid and ascends, and at this late day I recall with gratification the welcome registers against which we so quickly warmed our almost frozen feet. Today, while visiting our High School, I found that the atmospheric law in this respect had evidently reverted fixelf, for here the openings that admit coid air into the reoms are near the floor, and those that admit the hot, near the celling. It may be right in theory, but it certainly is most vicious in practice, and I can now easily see why my daughter dreads to go there, and is so frequently unable to attend on account of sickness. I listened to a recitation in a room that gets the forenoon sun, and which, under proper conditions, is surely a delightful place to occupy, but there were three windows open, and I felt it to be decidedly cold, especially about the feet. On inquiring of some pupils who sat near these windows, and at the farthest distance from the registers, why they had the windows open, they replied, "Well, we would rather freeze than suffocate. Why, the air about our heads is just dreadfull." Think of it! The hot air coming from above and settling about their heads, and that they constantly have Tolds? Can it be that the freman has not yet learned the combination, and turns the hot air into the wrong pipes? Since the teachers, although also suffering from cold, seem to accept the arrangement uncompisiningly, the fault with me may be in my understanding, and I would be very thankful for a simple explanation.

Taxation of Churches.

FILLMORE (Ventura county,) Jan. 10.—
(To the Editor of The Times:) Noticing the discussion concerning taxation of churches in your columns, I beg leave to submit to the same these considerations:

Since California is the only State in which I have resided, where churches the provides is un-americant.

Even the English press printed verbatim reports of the wonderful four days' examination of Mme. It is the best tribute to her wonderful qualities to say that when her four days' duel for life with the presiding magistrate was finished, last evening, there was a strong reaction of sentiment in her favor. The trial will continue probably another tendays, but it is hardly possible to exceed the dramatic interest of the long inquisition of the prisoner at the hands of the mingistriate.

Railway Locomotives are Often as Whimsical as Women.

Whimsical as Women.

(New York Commercial Advertiser:) That locomotives are freaky creatures and deserve classification as "she"—for no one ever heard of an engineer calling his machine anything else—is attested by William H. Crawford, chief of the Constructing Engineers' Corps of the Baldwin Works, who is now on the way to Japan to superintend the erection of a consignment of locomotives intended for a road operated by the government.

"It is not an uncommon expression," said Chief Crawford, "to hear that such and such a thing works with the regularity of a machine, and one is not surprised when such a comparison is made, for machines are supposed to work with mathematical regularity, and never to vary from the speed or action to which they are set. The locomotive, though, is a striking exception to this rule. It seems decidedly opposed at times to a monotomously perfect performance of its work, and to rid itself of the depressing effect of sameness it indulges in the most fanciful and inexplicable freaks, driving its master into bewildering wonder. To attempt to tell you all its curious ways would be as great an undertaking as to tell why a woman does thus and so. In this respect there is a great similarity between locomotives and women.

"No one ever heard of an engineer women.

"No one ever heard of an engineer speaking of his machine as 'he,' and no one ever will, unless it becomes more submissive to reason, or less inclined to act according to its own whims and caprices. missive to reason, of less inclined to act according to its own whims and caprices, or this Freason an engineer must know his engine before he can manage it with any skill at all. He cannot mount a cab in which he has never sat before and obtain good work. He must become familiar with its habits and ways, and whenever he changes engines he has to begin all over again. Engineers do not like to go out on any other engine. They never gain complete mastery over any, but approach it nearer when they have been on one for some time.

"This seems strange in view of the fact that there are so few levers to be controlled to manage a locomotive. The only parts of the machine necessary to be couched to move the engine forward, back it or bring it to a stop is the throttle, the reverse lever and the air brake. The throttle is the controller of the main valve, which admits or shuts off steam to the cylinder. The reverse lever runs overlasemi-circular bar of iron, in which there jumping. I do not mean to tell of the won-derful tales of engines leaping across can-yons when bridges were gone, but fre-quently when running at a high rate of speed if some small obstacle is met on the track the engine will jump ten or twelve inches and drop squarely on the rails again. These are a few of the ail-ments a locomotive is subject to, and they begin as soon as it leaves the shop and continue until it is consigned to the junk raile."

To reverse it the reverse lever is thrown backward. The only other lever necessary to be used governs the air brakes.

"Like horses, engines seem to know who holds the reins. An engineer on an engine not his own is at an utter loss what to do if it begins playing tricks, one of the most common of which is running away. The engineer will get out of the cab, leaving the machine standing quietly and submissively as can be, when of a sudden it starts along the track at top speed, and generally keeps on running until steam is exhausted, unless it runs into another train and is brought to a sudden stop. Just why engines do this is a mystery. How the throttle opens itself, or how it can run with the throttle closed is beyond the knowledge of engineers, but they do it, and sometimes play havoc, too."

"Another trick is foaming. Without warning the water in the boiler will begin to foam, and, instead of generating steam, will bubble like a tea-kettle. This can be remedied, though, by taking in a new supply of water. It is an old trick for discharged employees, and during strikes, to have a piece of soap dropped in the boiler to produce this effect. Often, too, it will go 'lamfe." This 'happens when the eccentric is sitipped or-it does not 'cough' properly. The eccentrics work on the axles of the main driver and often the outer ring will slip and fall on the axle. As they work the steam chest, the supply is cut off when one of them slips, and the engineer of the steam from the cylinder after it has been used. There ought to be four 'coughs' to every revolution of the driving wheels, but when the valves choke it will 'cough' one or vice, the stong of the main driver and often the outer ring the safety of the steam from the cylinder after it has been used. tigation, it should be steadily kept in mind, has been in no sense of the word a judicial inquiry. In the nature of the case it could not be. This, however, has enabled tactics to be employed toward witnesses which would not be tolerated a moment in an ordinary court of law. It has afforded an opportunity for a needless torturing and browbeating of witnesses, from which there was no escape, and for which there is no redress, and this opportunity at times has been so ruthlessly employed by the counsel for the committee as to make his actions savor of persecution rather than a desire to promote public ends. Should the police inquiry be continued next year it is to be hoped that greater care will be exercised to discriminate between the innocent and the guilty. Mere suspicion on the part of counsel, should not be allowed to blast the reputations of homest men.

Hints on Olive Pruning.

George H. Beach writes to the St.
Helena Star an article on pruning the olive, from which we take the following:
"The practice of pruning or cutting off of freshness."

Without too far discrediting the statements of an esteemed contemporary, it is proper to observe that some of John Burns's ideas are conspicuous for freshness.

We want to take this opportunity of sincerely thanking our many friends, both in the city and country, for the kind wordsabout this firm, and what is yet more appreciated, their kind deeds toward us. We are no experiment; for a number of years we have been in the closest touch with the best hotels, ranches, dairles, shops and employers of every kind from the wealthlest bankers down to the humblest homes, and that we have been enabled to bring forth from so many so much that is kind and so few that which is malicious is a matter for which we, with reasonable pride, congratulate ourselves. The fact of the unqualified indorsement of the people after having been tried by them for a number of years need only to be mentioned to make a very favorable impression on all what yet hesitate. FOR SALE—AT POMONA,

I SELL THE EARTH!

"Hardly," you say. "No, never," %ays I.

Never in Pomona's past history have the prospects of our valley been brighter than now. We have had The rains; everybody is working and happy. Our orange and olive trees are laden with fruit, and the happy possessor of an olive orchard is realizing $100 per ton, or 50 per lb. from his olives. Happy man he, who has an olive orchard to depend on for the future, and oranges?—well, we never had a better crop on our young navel orange trees than today, and the price is very good, more than was expected—from $1.50 to $2 per box. There is money in oranges at two-thirds that price. Our bearing orange orchards will produce from $100 to $800 per acre this year.

Poor Plorida! we feel for you. We know it is tough by personal experience a few years since, only on a more limited scale, but that slight experience caused us to walk the carpet and pull our hair and moan. But behind our tears of sympathy for you, there is a smille, not at your loss, but at our gain. For oranges are climbing the golden stairs, and the golden spheres are today worth two golden dollars per box, or from five to thirty golden eagles per acre.

Yes, we are weeping in sympathy for you and Joy for ourselves.

FOR SALE—AT POMONA—
"I SELL THE EARTH."

Pomona Valley for climate, soil and water, and as a pleasant place to live, is one of the finest valleys on the Pacific Coast. I say this after a residence of 21 years in California, and having traveled from one end of the Coast to the other, and resided in ten different localities.

Go to any locality, and by keeping your eyes open you can now pick up a bargain. As a rule, sales during the past three months have been dull. First, election, then the rains, and-now the holidays. But let me tell you, following the first of the new year there will be considerable activity in real estate. Today you can pick up in any locality where you wish to locate, bargains that in a few weeks will be gone.

In the Pomona Valley the best bargains to be had are the following, and each one is a genuine bargain, less than market price and less than actual value.

IT IS SAID THAT TO INSURE THE COntinued growth and prosperity of Los Angeles there must be a material growth in the number and diversity of her manufacturing industries. This we believe to be true, and now that the fuel problem has been solved, in the way of an abundance of oil at a low price, many manufacturing propositions that previous to the advent of cheap fuel were an impossibility can now be conducted with profit to the owners and be of material benefit to the people of Southern California. The history of small manufactories in communities like our own, when conducted on business principles and where fuel has been reasonably cheap, shows they invariably meet with success. Manufacturing industries rightly conducted in Los Angeles will be no exception to this rule. The permanent and lucrative business openings in Southern California are in the manufacturing propositions, and not in the retail businesses, of which there are so many. Apropos of the above, we want to inter-sit a good business manager, a man who cancommand from $5000 to $10,000, in a inanufacturing proposition of genuine meri; and with great possibilities. A gentleman of fine mechanical ability having a plant for the manufacture of a special line of goods of wide use and necessity, which plant is located in an outside town, desiring to move this plant to Los Angeles and further desiring to extend his now well-established business, wants a man of good business ability who can control $5000 of $10,000. To such a man the financial management and sale of the goods will be given. A full and thorough investigation invited. For further particulars call on or address O'BRIEN IN-VESTMENT CO., Bradbury Bidg, 13

The important change in the relative condition of the scale pests has been the entire eradication of the cottony cushion scale by the vedalla cardinalis; and the rapid increase of the black scale, till its prevalence is a commercial question in the marketing of cranges. The various Rhizohii have been colonized, and although it is too soon to report results, much is confidently hoped from their depredations upon the black scale.

Red and yellow scale have not increased, but it has cost much money for inspection and fumigation to thus control them.

Pernicious and soft brown scale need occasional attention, but parasites prevent them doing any wide-spread damage.

peared in some localities last spring and denuded young deciduous trees of buds and leaves.

While insect pests are numerous in variety, they have been prevented from doing material damage. This result has been accomplished by rigid inspection and quarantine, thus destroying many pests before they had time to colonize largely. The orchardists of this county-clean their trees of pests when discovered as faithfully as they cultivate or irrigate, realizing the equal necessity.

The fruit industry of this locality will continue to increase, as the natural conditions are exceptionally favorable. Several irrigation and land projects have been reorganized recently. Business methods and moderate prices have been adopted, in place of boom extravagance. The same conservative influence is reit throughout the county, and prosperity for the many individual orchardists is assured. The best results will be obtained through an extension of the present plan of co-operative marketing of fruits.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIA

OFFICE OF THE TIMES, January 12, 1895.

An effort will be made in the presen State Legislature to obtain some modification of the Wright irrigation act, as it a present exists. The law provides for district system of organization, by which the people in any given section, the lands of which are irrigable from a common source, may form an irrigation district similar to a municipal corporation, a city or a county. Having determined upon the source of supply and the most feasible manner of constructing the necessary works, estimates are made of the cost of such works, and the people interested are empowered to vote bonds to defray the cost, the bonds being a first tien upon all the property in the district to be benefited, and the payment of interest thereom and their redemption to be made through taxes regularly levied and collected, in the same manner as in the case of city and county bonds.

taxes regularly levied and collected, in the same manner as in the case of city and county bonds.

Bach district has a board of directors, whose office is to manage and control the affairs of the district in substantially the same manner as a board of supervisors manages the affairs of a county. There is provided an assessor, a collector and a treasurer, with like powers to those of the corresponding officers of a county.

Theoretically, this should make bonds issued under this act very popular among investors, and much sought after, but such has not been found to be the case to any great extent. In practice there have been found to be several weak points about the law in question. It is for the purpose of changing these that legislation will be sought in Saoramento. The Wright act has not worked in all cases favorably to the irrigator any more than to the investor. Only a few days ago the Anaheim Irrigation District was voted out of existence, only three votes having been cast for the continuation of the organization under the Wright system. It is estimated that the organization has cost the farmers of that section about $50,000 during its brief existence. The general idea of the Wright irrigation act is a good one, but it certainly needs some modifications that will prevent it from pressing too hard on the farmer on the one side, and at the same time satisfy the investor on the other.

The first annual meeting of the National Building and Loon Association was held on January 9, at No. 330% South Broadway. An especial feature of the meeting was the An especial feature of the meeting was the unusually large number of stockholders present, who took a lively interest in matters under discussion. The statement rendered at the meeting shows the association to be in a flourishing condition, with assets of over $270,000, and earnings for the year 1894 of $39,500. A dividend of 13 per cent was declared on the business of 1894. The following well-known gentlemen were elected directors for the ensuing year. Dr. W. G. Cochran, J. M. Witmer, A. E. Pomeroy, Ernest K. Foster, C. J. Wade.

During the past few weeks The Times has received from officials of the Southern California Fruit Exchange several letters, which, to put it mildly, border closely on the insolent in tone, and are only excus-able, if at all, on the presumption that the writers are grossly ignorant of the rudi-ments of business ethics, not to say of ordinary courtesy. The cause of all this is the fact that The Times has had the the fact that The Times has had the temerity to intimate that the officials of this organization might possibly, under certain circumstances, occasionally exhibit poor judgment in their actions. The remarkable fact that a little mild criticism is sufficient to cause some of these officials to make such an exhibition of themselvesto show such a dogmatic and overbearing character—is sufficient of itself to justify the doubt whether they are altogether fit for the responsible positions which they hold.

One of these peculiar persons, writing from Azusa, admits that there is fight between the exchanges and the commission men, and, commenting on a recenstatement of The Times that it would en statement of The Times that it would endeavor to steer clear of the rocks of both sides of the channel, and give it readers unadulterated facts, says: "I denote see the least excuse for any newspaper meddling with this fight."

If this were Russia instead of Souther California, and the writer of the communication, was a trusted official of the Cauthe, tone of the letter would excite no surples but we have not yet resched the gentlemen if the press would consent to keep silent in regard to any blunders which they make, and dispense unlimited "tafty" in regard to the operations of the exchanges, but The Times has too clear a sense of what is due to its numerous read-ers who are engaged in the orange-grow-ing business to pursue any such course. ers who are engaged in the orange-grow-ing business to pursue any such course. For many years The Times has urged the importance of co-operation among horticulturists in the marketing of their crops, and pages of matter have been printed on the subject in this journal, but, as previously stated, it does not by any means follow that because the exchange movement is a good, and wise, and proper one, that the officials of this organization are not likely to err, or, when they err, 30,523 does not please the commission men, either. Meantime, it will continue to adoctate the true interest of the fruit-grow-ers, and to print the facts as they hap-pen, without fear or favor, even if in so doing it should happen to tread on the corns of some official who is afflicted with temporary swelling of the cabeza. GENERAL BUSINESS TOPICS.

GENERAL BUSINESS TOPICS.

One of the most remarkable things in connection with the development of Southern California during the past few years has been the amount of water that has been discovered in almost every direction, and in many places where water was not believed to exist at a reasonable depth from the surface. The old idea of Southern California as a dry section is being rapidly exploded. The borings for oil which are now going forward have taught a good deal in this direction that will be of value in the near future. On some of the highest hills outside of the city, where wells have been sunk for oil, and where nobody would have dreamt of encountering water, so large a flow has been struck as to interfere with the boring for oil.

One of the most wonderful artesian wells in this or any other section of the United States. Is the Bouton well, near Long Beach. There appears to be a large and inexhaustible underground river beneath that section of country. A company has been formed for the purpose of utilizing this great and valuable supply of water. The Bouton Water Company, consisting of Gen. E. Bouton, of this city, and some capitalists of St. Louis, who are the principal owners of the Terminal Railway, have entered into a contract with J. F. Holbrook to manufacture and lay a main line of pipe from the Bouton wells at Bixby Station to Signal Hill and Long Beach. This pipe is to be of heavy steel, double-riveted and double-coated with asphaltum, fifteen inches inside diameter. The steel is rolled by the Loa Angeles Rolling Mills, they having just received ninety-six tons of steel billets from Chicago, ordered for that purpose. It takes 20,000,000 rivets to manufacture this line of pipe.

An Important Recommendation by the Sewer Committee—At the Courthouse—The Federal Grand Jury.

The Sewer Committee formulated an important recommendation in the matter of South Side irrigation.

Mayor Rader, consists of E. J. Post John Cross, Mathew Teed and W. H. Workman, held a meeting yesterday morn-ing, but did not elect either a superintend-ent or secretary, such elections being postent or secretary, such elections being post-posed till next Thursday morning. Con-mected with the meeting were one or two incidents, the significance of which is diffi-cult to interpret, but it is believed the facts will be developed later. Before the meeting the members of the board held a conference, or executive ses-sion. The board then met, and Street Superintendent Howard, the former secre-tary of the Park Commission, acted as clerk.

tary of the Park Commission, acted as clerk.

For secretary, Commissioner Cross nominated ex-Councilman W. H. Rhodes, and Mayor Rader placed in nomination Charles Deering. A vote being taken, Commissioners Cross and Teed voted for Rhodes, Commissioner Post and Mayor Rader for Deering and Commissioner Workman for R. M. Baker. The second roll-call developed the same number of votes for each candidate. Without any remarks, such as would tend to throw light on the matter, being made, the election of a secretary was postponed till next Thursday.

Mayor Rader spoke of the election of a president, whereupon Commissioner Cross remarked, with a degree of warmth that bordered close on to anger, that it is customary, where a course is decided on in executive session, to pursue such course in the following public meeting. Having made this remark, Mr. Cross said he thought it was agreed upon that the election of a superintendent should be postponed, and then moved that it be postponed till 10 o'clock a.m., next Thursday, which motion prevailed, without particular opposition.

Workman replied the route had been outlined subject to change, if considered advisable.

Commissioner Workman said that more good drives are much needed in the city and if the property-owners along the proposed lines could be made to realize the benefit that would accrue from such a boulevard as suggested in the resolution the building of such a road need be no great expense to the city.

Commissioner Cross said he believed a comfortable stockade ought to be built at Elysian Park and maintained under police surveillance where all idle men could be put to work and required to work for eight hours per day and that a detachment of them be given passes to come down town every day. The cost of keeping them for this purpose need be but little and the result would be the building of the road need not be very expensive.

Mayor Rader suggested that before presenting the matter to the Council a more definite plan be prepared.

For this purpose Commissioner Cross moved to have a committee of two members of the board appointed to prepare the plan in more definite form.

The motion prevailing the Mayor named Commissioners Cross and Workman as such committee.

The remarks made by Commissioner Cross about the policy decided of in executive session not being fulfilled in open meeting caused a good deal of gossip about the City Hall. It was reported that it was the understanding in the executive session that three of the members would vote for a certain man for secretary. One of them falling to do so Commissioner Cross made the remark he did. He was also stated that, although Commissioner Cross understood three of the members would keep together, that was not the understanding with all the other members.

SENSATIONAL BATTERY CASE.

Frank Kramer was charged in the Township Court, yesterday, with battery, the charge having been preferred by his wife, Anne. It appeared that the parties not only disagreed, but would not agree to disagree. Two years ago a divorce was obtained, but since then they have lived together in a more or less constant state of infelicity. On Sunday last the husband contrived to break one of the steps leading to the house, whereupon Mrs. Kramer sought revenge in a manner peculiar to herself, and somewhat original. She proceeded to cut up his best Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes, and, upon his remonstrating somewhat forcibly, she developed a faculty for swearing strange caths, both florid in character and unique in construction. The witnesses who testifed repeated many of the expressions, and for a time the air in Justice Young's courtroom was somewhat sultry and sulphurous. Inasmuch as both parties seemed to be involved in the quarrel, the defendant was discharged. SENSATIONAL BATTERY CASE.

Charles P. Dorian, a retail liquor-dealer, filed his petition in insolvency yesterday. The liabilities are piaced at $1263.30, and the assets, including the stock in trade, at $510.40.

Albert L. Clayton was brought before Judge McKinley yesterday, in Department Six, to be examined as to his mental status. On the recommendation of Drs. W. W. Hitchcock and E. A. Bryant he was discharged.

Oscars F. Pierce, an incorrigible minor, aged 11 years, was brought before Judge Smith, in Department One, yesterday. Upon the representation of witnesses that the lad was vicious and morally depraved, and beyond the control of his father, it was ordered that he be committed to the Whittier School during his minority.

In the suit of J. Marion Brooks, as execu-

It was held by the court that at she time of the decease of Dr. Steinhouser the trust company had no money belonging to him, but only the individual possessions of his wife.

The cases of Ah Yon, Guen Yen and Ah Govey, the two former being an appeal from Justice Seaman's court, and the latter from the court of City Justice Austin, being called before Judge Smith yesterday, were continued until January 19. The defendants were convicted in the lower courts of having illegal possession of lottery tickets, and the two first-name defendants were fined 310 each, and the latter, $25. From this judgment they appealed. The case of W. J. Stevens, an appeal from the Compton Township Court, was set for hearing on January 19, by Judge Smith yesterday. The defendant was fined in the lower court $25 for obstructing a public ditch.

We are closing out all Capes at a big reduction. Every garment is marked in plain figures, and from this a big reduction is made. Do you know what you are doing when you trade with a house that marks their goods in characters and then claim to give a reduction? Do you know that it is a practice in this city to take what is called a "divvy"? A "divvy" means that all above the marked price is divided between the clerk and the proprietor; that is a "divvy," or in other words a plain steal. This "divvy" business is carried to an extreme in this city. There is no 'divvy" in this house; we protect our customers.

ATCHISON'S AFFAIRS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—The committee of the Western roads, having under consideration the trouble between the Atchison cration the trouble between the Atchison and Southern Pacific, were in session all day and at one time were making such progress that they thought they would be able by evening to make an advance on the transcontinental and transmissouri rates. Later in the day, however, they struck a snag and the meeting was adjourned until Monday morning.

The obstacle was of small importance and there is a chance that it will be out of the way soon after the meeting again convenes. Chairman Caldwell, who is in New York, laboring with the trunk lines on the matter of differentials to be allowed to the Canadian Pacific, has informed the Western roads that he has reached an understanding with the trunk lines so satisfactory that there will be no necessity for a meeting between the Western and the trunk lines.

A Well-known Business Man's Utterances Misrepresented. It appears that in the report of the com-mittee, read at the meeting of the unem-ployed at the old City Gardens, on Friday night, a gross injustice was done the Bos-ton Store. In the report, as read, the "manager" of the Boston Store is quoted ah follows:

ah follows:
"I would not give a cent to the New Era Labor Exchange, but I would subscribe liberally to buy chains and balls to chain the unemployed in Westlake Park, and let them starve."
On investigation, this is found to be to chain the unemployed in Westlake Park, and let them starve."

On investigation, this is found to be a gross misrepresentation and distortion of the true facts of the case. When the committee called at the Boston Store, they met the manager, Mr. Blackstone, to whom they stated their mission. Mr. Blackstone made no statement whatever, but referred the committee to the secretary and treasurer of the company, and that official referred them to Mr. Ford, the president. That gentleman, after hearing the case presented, stated that he did not feel that he could indorse the plan proposed, towit, the establishment of a co-operative laundry, for the reason that it would interfere with businesses already established, in which considerable capital is invested, and which furnish employment to a large number of people. Mr. Ford further stated that he was in favor of the plan proposed of durnishing employment to idle men in Elysian Park, and would contribute liberally for that purpose. Continuing, Mr. Ford said that he had frequently been annoyed by tramps and vagrants calling at his residence and begging. In some cases these men were very persistent, and sometimes abusive, in certain instances even going so far as to try to push by the servants to get, into the door for food. In the case of these idle and vicious men, he favored putting them to work in the park, with ball and chain, but said nothing about "subscribing liberally to buy balls and chains," nor did hemake any strictures whatever on deserving men who were unfortunately out of employment. The line was clearly drawn, and there was no ground for a misunderstanding as to his position.

In view of this explanation, it will be readily seen by every fair-minded man that Mr. Ford's utterances were grossly distorted, and an entirely different construction placed upon them by the committee than he intended. There was no warrant for the hostile report made by the committee in writing to the "New Era Labor Exchange" meeting of Friday night.

KATZ AGAIN IN TROUBLE.

Grow, cashier of the Mercharts at Bank, treasurer. It is something apprise that the new road contemated by this proposed road is built to lide, and the proposed extension of acide Beach road is also made to diving town, which is the center of acres, just put under a new for acres, just put a numer c. This was in September, 1893, and, as Katz has never paid the bill, nor even made good Mr. Schnabel's check, patience ceased to be a virtue, and yesterday the check was turned over to the District Attorney, and application made for a complaint against Katz for embezzlement.

An Exciting Episode. An Exciting Episode.

An exciting episode occurred at First and Los Angeles streets yesterday afternoon. John O'Laverty, proprietor of the Blue Barn, on San Pedro street, somewhat under the influence of liquor, started across the street lust as a two-horse wagon belonging to the Wicland Brewerr came along. The driver did not check up, when O'Laverty grabbed the horses' bridles to save himself from being run over. This anspred the driver of the wagon, and he slashed O'Laverty across the face and head several times with his whip cutting him badly and causing him to release his hold, when he started to drive off. The atmosphere was lurid for awhile, but as no boliceman was around, no arrests were made.

WONDERFUL CHANGES.

THE WILD AND EXCITING BOOM DAYS OUTDONE.

A Bare Field of One Hundred and Fifty Acres Transformed into a Beautiful and Attractive City in Twelve Months.

During "boom" times new subdivisions were staked off, "boom side-walks" laid, maps issued and the prop-erty placed on sale. Speculators stood in line to buy at fabulous prices, expecting to advance the price and wait for the home-seeker to buy and build his home. The home-seeker did not come, the streets grew up in weeds, the lot stakes disappeared and the boom was "busted." The home-seeker saved his money and waited till bot-16th of January, 1894, Grider & Dow put their Briswalter and Adams-street racts (comprising over seven bundred lots) on sale, the prices were so satisfactory that 125 lots were sold in one day. Miles of streets bave been graded and graveled. cement walks and curbs laid, water ment walks are sprinkled. piped and the streets are sprinkled. THE CENTRAL AVE. PORTION OF THE CITY. The Tide Finally Turned East of Main Street and Toward the Southern Portion.

Until about a year ago it was next to impossible to sell a piece of prop-erty unless it was in the southwestern erty unless it was in the southwestern part of the city. Buyers would go in that direction from two to five miles from the business center, until it became generally known that there was a much healthier location, on higher ground, at less than half that distance, where there was sandy loam soil, with graded sceets, electric roads and all city privileges, and where lots could be bought at one-fourth of the prices asked in the southwestern part of the city.

Since that time nine new subdivisions have been made in that locality. more than sixteen miles of new streets graded, 1200 building lots sold, built, all the latter being now occu-pied. Shrewd speculators and homeseek-ers are taking advantage of the low prices in this section, for it is plainly seen that an investment made now will double in value in the next few months. These are facts that cannot be disputed. The hundreds of buildings, new streets and public improve-ments made in the last six months speak more than words. It is well worth a trip down Central avenue to the orange groves south of the city. ANOTHER FIGHT BETWEEN RI VAL CHINESE FACTIONS.

Brickwork and Glass Damaged, but no One Injured—Several of the Combatants Captured by the Officers.

A fierce fight was commenced last evening at 8:10 o'clock, by members of the rival factions in Chinatown, but no one had been hit or killed when Officers Robbins, Ritch and Stevenson ran into the melee and stopped the combat.

Ham Ah Lock, an unarmed Hop Sing Tong retainer, and a companion were set upon by Lee Gim, Luey Foo, Wong Yee and Yuen Sing of the Bing Kong Tong on Apablasa street near Juan. At least eighteen shots were fired at the fleeting heathens, none of which took effect, but which damaged which took eneet, but which damaged brick work and glass to some extent. The officers telephoned for help to suppress an impending riot and the patrol wagon with Sergt. Jeffries and Officers Reynolds and Stites hurried to the scene. Sergt. Jeffries ried to the scene. Sergt, Jeffries caught the first man, Lee Gim, on the spot, and Officer Stephenson got Yuen Sing, alias Ah Young, near by. Officers Robbins and Reynolds captured Luey Foo in a wash-house near the Macy-street bridge with his ret grimy revolver at his side. More developments are expected today and a fresh and more furious fight is looked for and more furious fight is looked for

This fight is the outcome of the murder of Loo Chung and the succeeding fight between Lee Ding and Luey Foo, who participated last night. Let off with a Light Fine.

Miss Cuttiford, Cured by Dr. Shores Four Months Ago, Reports no Return of Her Former Troubles.

Does Dr. Shores cure Catarrh and Chronic Diseases? Are his cures per-manent and lasting? In proof of the fact the following testimonial is given from Miss Cuttiford, who nearly four months ago, was cured by Dr. Shores.

Miss Cuttiford, Residence 1023 Four-teenth Street, Cured of Chronic Ca-tarrh and Stomach Trouble in One Month by Dr. Shores' Expert Spec-ialty Treatment.

I wish to state that for years I was a wretched woman, my head and nose always stopped up, dropping in the throat, cough, pains in the throat, cough, pains in the chest and shoul-der blades.

"I was terribly nervous and excita-ble; restless at night and could not ble; restless at night and could not sleep; in the morning, upon arising, would feel worse than when I went to bed; I was weak and emaclated; I had no appetite, and what I did eat distresstd me greatly; I had lost flesh and was losing all hope of ever being cured; three months ago I was cured by Dr. Shores' system, and today I can say I was never as well in my life; I am gaining rapidly in flesh and not in one instance have I the slightest return of my former allments."

Go see Miss Cuttiford, ask her if her statement is true, hear from her own lips grateful words praising the wonderful success of this new treat-ment.

THE FLOWER TRADE

Roses Dethroned, Carnations Now all the Rage.

Demand for Decorative Hous Plants—The Renting Plan Gaining Favor.

Capital Invested in the Business Los Angeles Sales Nearly a Quarter of a Million Dollars a Year.

A land of sunshine is, naturally, a land of flowers. What is here meant is the cultivated flower. That there are lands on which the sun shines, but on which no flowers are growing, is no exception to the rule. The reason why they are not grow-ing is because there are no persons living on the land to plant them and water them on the land to plant them and water them when required. None of these conditions are lacking in Los Angeles. It does not therefore require any violent wrench of imagination to understand why this city and all Southern California should be clad the year through in floral robes of brilliant has any street. hue and shaded by palms in endless variety. Thousands of willing hands are here to plant and cultivate flowers, water to moisten the roots, and sun to bud and develop them into full and fragrant bloom.

TRADE IN CUT FLOWERS. Aside from flowers grown for the pleasure of those persons owning their own property, the trade done in cut flowers alone in this city represents a very large sum. A Times reporter took the trouble o inquire; about it, and, among other things, learned that the value of cut flowers sold in Los Angeles exceeds $30,000 a year. The trade is steadily increasing. There is one firm alone which sold last year over $15,000 worth of cut flowers, and to quote his own words, "we expect to sell a good many more than that this present a good many more than that this present year,"

One rather surprising feature in connection with it is that the business is nearly all local, not more than one-fourth of the cut flowers ordered being sent East. This fact would seem to further emphasize the other fact that sunny weather and flow-first naturally intermarry. A delicate flower would not be out of place in a frigid zone. The hrighter and warmer the weather the more lovely and refreshing a flower looks, and, in a corresponding degree, the desire for flowers is increased.

CARNATIONS THE RAGE.

CARNATIONS THE RAGE.

a flower looks, and, in a corresponding degree, the desire for flowers is increased.

CARNATIONS THE RAGE.

The carnation is now the favorite flower. The rose is dethroned. It may be that it will again and before long reassert its pre-eminence in public favor, but in the meantime the carnation holds paramount sway. When it is stated that one cutflower house in this city sold over half a million carnations during the year just ended, one is enabled to form some slight conception of its popularity. The preference is given to the California variety, for, as one Broadway nurseryman said, "California is now producing the finest carnations grown in the world."

The dimensions of some of the finer speciments are simply immense. It is nothing unusual to see a California carnation four inches in diameter, and some buds attain a diameter of even five inches. One reason, and the principal one, why the carnation does better in California than in the East, is that is can be grown in the open air. In the East it has to be forced in hot-houses, and is propagated to death. The result is the production of small, puny specimens vastly inferior to those originated in Southern California. For a long time it was supposed that Redondo and its neighborhood raised the finest carnations, but the dealers say that they can now get as fine specimens, grown in and about Los Angeles, as those grown near the beach. One thing, however, in regard to their finest and fullest development, seems to be acknowledged, it is that they do better within ten or fifteen miles of the coast line than they do further inland.

A peculiar thing in connection with the California carnation is that no effort has ever been made at a classification of the varieties originally here. They all go under the general head of "California Carnations," the only distinction given them being dark plink or light pink. With the Eastern varieties it is not so. Among these latter the favorite in red is the Portia, in white the Lizzle McGowan, and in yellow the Sunset. The Red Cr

FAVORITES IN ROSES.

In roses the teas still hold first place.
Being ever bloomers, the climate is admirably adapted to them, and if, in the opinion of some connoisseurs, they are not so distinguished in pose and appearance as some of the high-class hybrids, the fact that their ever-blooming properties make that their ever-blooming-properties make them a continuous joy more than atones in the opinion of others for any deficiencies in looks. While there are nearly four hundred varieties of roses grown here, those that hold first place in the affections of the ladies of Los Angeles could be counted on the fingers of both hands. The fair ex remains singularly constant and faithful to a few choice varieties, among which are the Marie Van Houte, La France, Papa Gontier, Duchesse de Brabant, Marechai Niel, La Marque and Beauty of Glazenwood, sometimes called Gold of Ophir. All of these grow here to berfection, and they are all such grand varieties that it is no wonder the rose expects to live to see the day when the carnation shall cease to exercise its present supremacy.

CAMELLIAS AND ORCHIDS

CAMELLIAS AND ORCHIDS.

Florists say that the camellia is not grown here nearly so extensively as it should be, or as one would expect it to be in this climate. It is a mistake to suppose it would not thrive here. All dealers agree in saying that never at any time within the memory of the oldest inhabitant has the thermometer ever got low enough to injure a camellia. One care only is necessary, not to give them too great an exposure of sun. If, in addition to this, trouble is taken to fertilize theroots with partially decomposed vegetable matter, such as can be found at the base of oak and other forest trees, and mossy matter with the rootlets and earth attached, there is no reason why the camellia, especially the japonica variety, should not do as well here as it does in the most favored portions of China and Japan. The gardenia variety will not do so well as the japonica, the reason assugned for that baker that the climate does not CAMELLIAS AND ORCHIDS. The gardenia variety will not do so well as the isponies, the reason assumed for that being that the climate does not get cold enough to sufficiently tone it up. Those who do grow the camellia and take proper care of it, are well rewarded, for specimens are known here which have at one time over two hundred blossoms, the plant measuring over ten feet in height.

FLOWERS TO ACTRESSES.

"Other times other manners!" Time was, and not so long ago, when actresses on their first appearance in a new play were literally buried in bouquets. That is no longer "good form." "No flowers" at funerals is also the general order of the day, for which every one but the florist feels duly thankful. Marriages still have their flowers but, as the dealers say, the bouquets are confined to things choice and small.

DECORATIVE HOUSE PLANTS.

For these the demand is largely on the increase. One prominent dealer said that where five years ago there was no demand for house plants, it was now so great that all growers had to increase their stocks. The reason fer this, he said, was that many people now lived in flats who formerly occupied a house or cottage where they had a garden. In flats they can't have a garden so they buy plants to decorate their rooms. Among these the chief, favorites in small palms and plants are the phoenix canariensis, the chamrophs, the excelsion and the cycas revoluta. This last variety is the most expensive. Ferns are also used, the adiantum (maiden hair) in several varieties being the one mostly asked for. The graceful smilax is also used, and as it grows here in abundance it is not expensive. In the commoner kinds of fern the sword is used.

For decorations on a large scale at re-DECORATIVE HOUSE PLANTS.

the commoner kinds of fern the sword is used.

For decorations on a large scale at receptions and dinner parties all of the finer and larger varieties of assorted plants, palms and ferns are used, but on such occasions they are rented and not sold. The plan of renting plants for an evening is gaining in favor. The person giving the entertainment tells the kind and number of plants wanted, and the fiorist does the rest. The orders run from haif a dozen plants at a charge of $2.50 up to fifty and more at a cost of $25 for the evening.

The sale of outside ornamental trees this last year has been fairly good, but the demand has been less proportionately than for house plants. The kinds asked for include landscape and avenue varieties. In these the California fan palm continues a favorite; also the silk cak of Australia. There is some inquiry for the rubber tree (figus elasticia) which furnishes the rubber of commerce. For landscapes the aurecaries are preferred, but they still command high prices, ranging from $1$ to $5 for growing specimens.

CAPITAL INVESTED.

There are at the present time six dealers in cut flowers in the city, and thirty-five nursery firms. Most of these latter, in addition to flowers and ornamental trees, raise fruit stock. No reference is made to the latter in the figures here given. A careful calculation on figures obtained from the florists show an investment in this city in the business of flowers and ornamental trees of from $350,000 to $400,000. This sum represents the buildings, conservatories, ground, stock and articles necessary for carrying on the business. The investment is principally in the hands of a few, who supply the smaller dealers with flowers and plants. The annual sales of decorative plants, and ornamental trees exceeds $200,000. When to this is added the sales from cut flowers it is seen that the total sales in this city from that industry are close on a quarter of a million dollars a year. CAPITAL INVESTED.

Ideas and Idiosyncrasies-The Pro gramme for a New Political Union, Free from the Old Parties.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 12, 1895 .- (To the of The Times:) Several weeks ago beting of citizens who believe that improper monetary legislation is the real cause of the existing business depression, and that there can be no return of genal prosperity until a remedy is applied at will undo the mischief of that legis-tion. This meeting was public, al-ough it was only advertised through perfication. At this meeting a comind a chairman who is a Republican, was pointed to prepare a platform and pro-time for independent political action on that issue which is conceived to be issue of paramount importance, the issue of paramount importance, namely, the money question. After a number of meetings and much discussion, the committee prepared a report and submitted it at a meeting held December 26 and the report was adopted. This report authorized the election of a president and the appointment of an executive committee of fifteen to initiate the movement. Enoch Pepper, Esq., was elected president, and has appointed as a portion of the committee of fifteen the persons whose names are appended to the following address. It is intended to complete the committee by appointing citizens of other parts of the State.

To the people of the State of California: A proper respect for the opinions of our fellow-chitzens requires that in connecting ourselves with the initiation of an independent political movement having so important an object as the reformation of the money system of the country, we should state the reasons that actuate us in so doing.

The existence of an extraordinary business depression is admitted by everybody, except, perhaps, the few who are the beneficiaries of existing unjust conditions.

jons.

This depression is not confined to the united States, but it is confined to those puntries that have money systems based upon the gold standard, or which practice old redemption.

countries that have money systems based upon the gold standard, or which practice gold redemption.

The value of the unit of money, or the unit of account (which, in the United States, is the dollar.) depends upon the aumber of units, or the volume of the maricular kind of money that, is used for the purpose of ultimate redemption. In gold-standard countries it depends upon the volume of gold money; in silverstandard countries, it depends upon the volume of silver money; in bimetallic, or gold-and-silver-standard countries—countries, that is, that have the free and untimited coinage of both metals at a fixed ratio—it depends upon the aggregate volume of gold and silver money.

In gold-standard countries an increased demand for gold, or a decreased supply of gold increases the value of the unit, or dollar. This effect is intensified if there occurs simultaneously both an increase in the demand for gold was created by the legislation demonetizing silver that took place in Europe and the United States within the decade from 1870 to 1880. From that regislation there resulted a contraction of the volume of standard money, which produced an increase in the production of gold. These facts are asserted and admitted by so many and by such high authorities, and they are so amply contraction of pold. These facts are asserted and admitted by so many and by such high authorities, and they are so amply contributed. mitted by so many and by such high authorities, and they are so amply contirmed by experience, that no well-informed person will presume to deny them.

An inorease in the value of standard money (which, in the United States, is gold) is reflected in a decrease in the price of property and products. A fall in the price of property and products is the same thing as a rise in the price of standard money.

Falling prices that result from cheapening the cost of production, are always Falling prices that result from cheapening the cost of production, are always attended with great and general prosperity. But falling prices that are simply the reflection of an increase in the value of standard money are uniformly attended by acute business distress. There is a cheapness that ruins. The cheapness that ruins is that which simply reflects an increase in the value of money, and is manifested in a general and persistent dewnward course of prices, and that is the kind of cheapness which the people of the United States have been partaking of for nearly a quarter of a century.

There can be no return of prosperity until something is done to stop that increase in the value of money which is reflected.

in the value of money which is reflected in the value of money which is reflected in the general downward course of prices that has been experienced since 1873. There are only two ways in which that in-crease in the value of money can be stopped; First, by a vast increase in the stopped: First, by a vast increase in the production of the standard money metal—gold. Secondly, by increasing the volume of standard money through the free and unlimited coinage of some other money metal. An adequate increase in the production of gold is not to be expected. The free coinage of another money metal is therefore the only alternative.

From the time of Abraham to the time of President Grant, silver, equally with gold, shared the confidence of mankind and assisted in performing the money work of the world. The United States is the largest producer of silver in the world. The restoration of the free coinage of silver is, therefore, the most direct and practicable step that can be taken to restore prosperity to the people of the United States. The United States is the best course of supply for European gold standard countries, and especially for Great Britain, in respect to those products of which we have a surplus and they a declency. Gold monometallists concede, and the recent experience of silver standard countries abundantly demonstrate. cleary. Gold monometallists concede, not the recent experience of silver standard countries abundantly demonstrates, but the full use of silver as money greatly imulates the export trade. These facts satify the assurance that the United tates can maintain the double or optional landard without the co-operation of any ther nation.

But the reformation would be incompete and ineffective that provided for incasting the volume of standard money rough the free coinage of silver and left in note-issuing function in the control of some who could contract the volume paper currency at the promptings of li-interest. Gold and silver coins snould, a hale and adequate extent, be supplemented by a paper currency which should issued directly by the national government.

the controlling influence in both of the clinant political parties is against the a coinage of silver and in favor of yating the power to issue paper curry to corporations. If there shall appear to be any presumption in our undertaking to initiate the movement in and for the State of California, we shall rely for justification upon the fact that everybody's business is nobody's business until somebody assumes the responsibility of attending to it. In the profound belief that the welfare of the people imperatively demands it, we hereby resolve to unite for political action to secure the reform of the money system of the United States, and we cordially invite our fellow-citizens to join this movement and assist in accomplishing its purpose.

we declare that the political independence of European domination which our forefathers achieved by the sword be supplemented by financial independence of European domination which our forefathers achieved by the sword be supplemented by financial independence which may be achieved by legislation.

We declare that the control of the government should forthwith be wrested from the agents of an arrogant, selfish and insatiable money power, which so makes and administers law as to enrich the few and to pauperize the many.

We declare that the existing industrial conditions, wherein prices are ruinously low, capital lacks investment, manufacturing is restricted and labor starves, are the direct and necessary result of a quarter of a century of plutocratic government.

We declare that the safeguard of liberty is the free and secret ballot, and that by it all necessary reforms can be effected.

We declare that the paramount issue of the next Presidential campaign must be the restoration of silver to the position it occupied under the Constitution and the laws of Congress prior to 1873, and the remodeling of the money system of the country so as to assure a sound circulating medium in sufficient volume to meet the demands of trade and restore life to the now prostrate industries of the land.

We declare that all who favor the free colinage of silver and other monetary reform should unite to secure the success of these measures at the next Presidential election.

As a means of organizing for the promo-tion of this reform we recommend the formation of Silvér Leagues in all the counties of this State by obtaining signa-tures to the following roll of membership: SILVER LEAGUE-ROLL OF MEMBER-SHIP.

We, the undersigned, voters of the city, county of State California, do hereby enroll ourselves members of the "Silver League," and as members of the "Sliver League," and do bereby pledge ourselves to united political action, to secure a reform of the money system of the United States that will supply the people with a sufficient volume of money to meet the demands of business, consisting of gold and silver, coins, and United States treasury notes, all of which shall be an unlimited legal tender for all debts, public and private; that will forbid the making of private contracts discriminating against any part of the circulating medium; that will provide fors the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver, at a ratio not exceeding sixteen ounces of silver to one of gold, and without regard to the action of any other nation or nations; that will abolish national banks of issue and delegate to no individual or association of individuals the power to issue money in any form.

Among the reasons that prompt us to take this action are the following:

We believe that there is no economic instrument that bears so vital a relation to the material welfare of man as money.

We believe that the existing deplorable industrial conditions are directly due to legislation adversely affecting the money system of the country, an important part of which is the legislation depriving sliver of the unlimited money functions with which it was endowed by the founders of the government.

We believe that there can be no permament or general relief from the hardship of existing conditions, nor escape from worse conditions that are surely impending, except through such changes in the money system of the country as will increase the volume of money to an amount equal to 15 per cent, of the annual domestic commerce of the country and thereby stay the incessant fall of the currency.

We believe that public opinion is now ripe for action upon the measures of rorm, which it is the object of this league to accomplish, and that success in effecting these reforms will be easy if those who think alike can be induced to vote alike. We believe it to be the present duty, enjoined alike by patriotism and philanthropy for all voters to ignore their present party affiliations and to unite in electing to office those orly who are unequivocally pledged to, at the earliest practical moment, give the people financial legislation of the kind herein outlined. LA FIESTA OF 1895.

The Committee Formally Enters on its Duties.

A Street Parade, Which was Followed by Speaking at the Headquarters.

Remarks by Director-General Mey-berg, President Koepfii, Col. Freeman G. Teed, Henry Steers and Others.

With just sufficient dignity to give ecla to the occasion, the ambassadors of Her Majesty, the Queen of La Flesta de Los Angeles, arrived in the city last even-ing, presented their credentials and were duly honored and welcomed on behalf of the city by the Mayor, the Council and

THE PROCESSION.

It was almost 8 o'clock when the pr

The regimental staff turned out in force, and Capt. Halpin of Co. G, stationed at Anaheim, was among the visitors.

The procession marched down Broadway to Fourth street, thence to Spring, to the junction of Spring and Temple, returning along Main street to the carnival head-quarters, between First and Second streets.

along Main street to the carnival head-quarters, between First and Second streets.

The hall had been decorated to some extent with bunting, and box paims on the stage, with a few flowering plants, gave an attractive appearance to the scene. Maj. W. C. Furrey, as chairman of the evening, occupied the central position on the stage, with Mayor Rader to his left, and President Koepfil of the Merchants' Association to his right. Among others occupying seats on the stage were Max Meyberg. Supervisors Hanley, Pierce, Woodward, Councilmen Ashman, Savage, Munson, Teed, Pessell, Superintendent of Schools Search, J. T. Sheward, H. Jevne, M. H. Newmark, S. B. Lewis, J. S. Salkey, R. Bilderrain and others.

Remembering that "brevity is the soul of wit." the speeches were short and to the point, and the ceremonies, which were interspersed with short musical selections by the band, were in no sense tedious and appeared to be thoroughly enjoyed by the audience that fairly well filled the hall.

Maj. Furrey opened the proceediags by hall.

Maj. Furrey opened the proceedings by extending, in the name of the Merchants' Association, thanks to all present for their attendance at the opening of the important work preparatory to La Fiesta. Without further preamble, he introduced Max Meyberg, as director general of the festival. After the welcoming applause had died away, Mr. Meyberg spoke as follows:

MR. MEYBERG'S SPEECH. . -

committee were enabled to accomplish in making the flesta a success last year. I regret that I am not an orator, for I would then be enabled to deacribe in glowing language how much more beautiful La Flesta might be made. Meantime, however, I desire to say a few words, and more particularly to my committee: "Gentlemen of La Flesta Committee: It becomes my pleasant duty tonight to greet you at your first meeting as the Flesta Committee of 1895, and wish you good speed for the work for which you have signified your intention to undertake. The proposition of our next festival in April is a great one—great in its undertaking, great in its conception, and it will be great in its culmination. The great honor conferred on me by the Merchanit's Association, in selecting me as director-general for this year's La Flesta de Los Angeles, I accepted with the knowledge that my leadership will be abetted by your valuable assistance.

"One of my most pleasant recollections of the celebration of 1894 was the great unanimity with which the entire committee assisted me in carrying out the details. The great success attained was due to them, and the thanks of our citizens are due them for the untiring energy with which they took hold of the proposition and carried out the details. The greatest benefit not devoid of results was one not widely known, the knowledge attained by the committees that this city has among its inhabitants a number of most estimable gentlemen, of which Los Angeles can feel justly proud, as they were largely represented in the committees.

"It is one of our greatest detriments in this city that gentlemen meet so seldom to exchange views and observations, to throw aside husiness, and remember, that we are in this beautiful world for other purposes than solely for the attainment of riches. Frequent meetings for the interchange of opinions would make better men of us. We would understand and think more of each other, and find that mankind is in this world for joy as well as work. To the wives and sisters of my c as true Americans to respond to a call of duty."

"It now becomes my pleasing duty," remarked Maj. Furrey, "to introduce to you the new president of the Merchant's Association, Mr. J. O. Koepfil."

The audience gave Maj. Koepfil a round of applause by way of encouragement, after which he spoke as follows:

PRESIDENT KOEPFLI'S REMARKS:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen: You are assembled here as friends of La

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen:
You are assembled here as friends of La Flesta, and as such it becomes my pleasant duty to thank you on behalf of the Merchants' Association of Los Angeles for this first demonstration of your interest in the flesta of 1895.
"To many of you the success of the last flesta was largely due, and to you I can only offer our thanks and express the hope that your deeds may equal those of last year. To those of you, however, who are recruits in the cause, I desire to point out whereon the salient points of the last flesta's phenomenal success rested.
"First—Gentlemen, your mass was leavened by the indomitable courage, energy and enterprise of your director general.
"Second—The Flesta Committee of 1894 acted in unity as one man, there was not a single instance of petty jealousy or dissension; each committee and every member af each committee stood ready to assist one another regardless of the question of strict duty, but the watchword was 'La Flesta is and must be a success.' Again, the gift of oratory in committee meeting was a lost art; the words that were said were few, but bore strictly on business.
"Third—The community at large stood with us; individuals and corporations laid aside the desire for gain; money and services were giadly rendered and donated for La Fiesta's good. And lastly, gentle-men, but not leastly, there was that ster-ling body, the bones and sinews of your business community, there were those quiet, unassuming men who keep the yheels of commerce moving and at whose heart lies first the prosperity of the com-munity; there was behind the whole move-ment, giving it stability, weight and standing, the Merchants' Association of Los Angeles wift all its members, power and wealth.

"And in closing I wish to assure you.

Los Angeles with all its members, power and wealth.

"And in closing I wish to assure you, as the executive officer of this association that this year the Merchants' Association will stand behind you, and is more intent than ever upon making La Fiesta de Los Angeles a permanent institution with us, one that will bring out people renown, as well as more material benefits; and these advantages, gentlemen, will extend also to the counties and States which are beginning to look to Los Angeles as their queen and which must be brought to acknowledge her supremacy. I thank you."

MAYOR RADER SPEAKS.

MAYOR RADER SPEAKS.

Mayor Rader was then presented to the audience in felicitous terms by the chairman. The audience accorded him a warm welcome, and followed his few remarks with close attention. "I feel some heeinancy," remarked Mayor Rader, "in expressing myself upon this subject of La Fiesta for I am somewhat of a novice. I came here with the idea of listening to the opinions of others—of those who were so successful in their efforts last year—than offer my own. I may say, however, that I am most thoroughly imbued with the ideas that have been ventilated and will do all that I can to make the coming fiesta one of the grandest festivals ever held in our city. The general progress in an affair of this kind is necessarily left in the hands of those whose immediate duty it is to arrange the details, and so I am sure I need say nothing further."

WHAT COL. TEED SAID.

what col. Teed said.

Maj. Furrey did not evidently believe in talking much himself, but with the most commendable brevity introduced the next speaker—Col. Freeman G. Teed—"as a gentleman without whom it would scarely be possible to hold a festival in Los Angeles." Col. Teed began by saying that of course he assumed that no one present expected him to say anything, and perhaps, for good reasons. In the first place he didn't have anything to say, and secondly, if he had he wouldn't know how to say it. He expressed his cpinien that work is better than oratory, and, in his opinion, it was owing to an absence of the latter quality last year that La Flesta was such a success. "Oratory," said he, "goes for very little in everything—save politics. I was on the committee last year, you will remember, and had something to do with the parades. It seems to me that parades are the principle things in all shows wherever held in the world. It then behoves all having anything to do with La Flesta to begin and make early preparations, for the success. I think, depends more on the parades than on any other feature. As outlined by the director general and also by the city press the matter should be taken up at once, and not post-poned until the last hour when the success of the enterprise may be inperilled." WHAT COL. TEED SAID.

HENRY STEERE FOR THE MILITARY Following the address of Col. Teed, the remark was made by Maj. Furrey that, joking apart, it would not be possible to have La Fiesta without the military, and the remark brought Capt. Henry Steere to his feet. His speech was short and anappy, touched with wit, and caught the fancy of the audience. "I have been placed before you," he began, "in a dusi role; to speak a word or two for the National Guard, and also say something as a railroad man. Permit me to thank you for the kind esteem in which you bold the National Guard. In a very short time it goes into the legislative incubator for rehatching. It needs it, and it is to be hoped that the Legislature may hatch out a brood of fighting cocks, and not a batch of shaaghais; a good fighting force, an honor to themselves and to the people who support them." Following the address of Col. Teed, the

"I don't think—if ever there was any doubt as to the patriolism of the citizens of Los Angeles—that any doubt has remained since La Flesta of 1894. The energy of the director-general and the committee in surmounting difficulties, and getting through the large amount of hard work, was sufficient to guarantee the success of an enterprise undertaken by the merchants of the city. The flesta of 1895 bids fair to far outrank the one of 1894. Everything is propitious. The financial storms of 1894 have exhausted their force; success begets success; there will not only be hearty co-operation on the part of the citizens of this city, but from all surrounding towns. Almost all this points to the fact that Los Angeles must always be the pleasure ground of Southern Californis. But to make La Flesta eclipse the one of last year will take a large amount of money, and I do not doubt that the citizens will see the coffers of the committee filled to the brim in order that it be brought to a successful issue. I don't know what charm the Finance Committee possessed in 1894, but it seemed as if there was not one man who would not have rather refused a but it seemed as if there was not one man who would not have rather refused a drink than refused a subscription to La Flesta de Los Angeles in business acumen, push and energy, stands first in Southern California, and must in the future as in the past, be in the yanguard of advance-the past, be in the vanguard of advancement and material prosperity."

Prof. Search, Superintendent of Schools, in a very few words, expressed the pleasure it would afford him to co-operate in every way that he could in order that the festival be a gigantic success, and guaranteed that the schools would not lag behind, but would do their part to attain the same desired end.

Max Meyberg, in his official position as director-general of La Flesta of 1895, then formally declared the committee to be duly constituted, and appointed Wednesdays and Saturdays as the days when business will be transacted at th eleadquarters on Main street.

It is "a Newspaper."

(Santa Monica Outlook!) There is one characteristic of the Los Angeles Times which commands the respect of the reading public, and that is it prints the news, and prints it all, without fear or favor. The mere fact of The Times being antagonistic to a proposition or locality doesn't interfere in the slightest degree with its presenting all the facts in the one case or giving credit in the other. The Times is essentially a newspaper, and there are not many like it.

"A Mine of Information."

(Fresm) Republican:) The Los Angeles Times' annual edition was a publication in every way worthy of the best paper in Southern California. In its thirty-six illustrated pages was a mine of information concerning the beautiful southern country and its banner county. The Times does nothing by halves.

A DAY'S FAKE RACING

The So-called "Horsemen's Novelty Meeting."

Only a Few People Put in an Appearance at Agricultural Park.

The Various Events Devoid of Interest, with the Exception of a Race—A Very Bad Failure

While this city has been deservedly termed "the banner trotting town of the Coast," no better evidence of the fact that the sport-loving element is not to be caught by anything which savors of a fake could possibly be adduced than the attendance at the so-called "horsemen's Park yesterday.
At 1:30 o'clock, the hour set for the commencement of the programme, scarcely a corporal's guard was on hand, but dur-ing the next hour about 200 people, of whom at least half were of the gentler sex, and therefore admitted free, dribbled into the grounds. A corps of pool and mutual sellers was on hand, but speedily becoming convinced that their services were not in demand, the individual mem bers of it drifted away and helped to line the fence in front of the grand stand There were at least a dozen buggies and carriages, but their occupants evidently preferred the society of their fellow-men, for none ventured into the solitude of the for none ventured into the solitude of the infield.

At 2:35 o'clock the judges, Messrs. E. B. Gifford, Ed Connolly and W. Murray, ascended the stand and called the horses out for the first event. There was no prilited programme, each event being announced beforehand; but as the judges themselves appeared to be unaware of the identity of the starter much was left to the imagination of the spectators.

The first was styled a novelty driving race, and it was unique in some respects, for it proved to be a contest between six well-known reinsmen as to whom could drive a mile nearest to four minutes. The starters were Ed Ryan's bl. g. Black Pilot; G. Maben's b. h. Pio; C. A. Durfee's bl. h. Caliph; Ben Dwyer's bl. h. Black Silk; Will Durfee's b. f. Stambell, and J. Spence's s. f. Utopia. The last-named, who finished fifth, was duly declared the winner, as Spence drove under the wire only a quarter of a second shead of time, Dwyer being second with half a second to spare.

Then come the first heat of a quarter.

only a quarter of a second ahead of time, Dwyer being second with half a second to spare.

'Then came the first heat of a quartermile race for ponies which was the only exciting event of the day, for both the animals and the boys who rode them did their level best to make things interesting.

There were four starters, a pinto named Dandy, a bay named Don, a fawn-colored pony known as Prince, and a mouse-colored little horse appropriately named the Mouse. The quartette got off well together, but Dandy on the inside soon went to the front and, though challenged by Don about one hundred yards from home, shook him off and won by a length, in 0.32½.

During a long wait, Fantasy and Hal Pointer, the stars of the Hamlin string, were exhibited in front of the grandstand After they had been led back to their stalls, three horses came out for the gentlemen's road race, viz: Dr. Souchet's g. f.; C. A. Durfee's bl. c. Caliph, and Will Durfee's b. f. Stambell. Caliph easily outclassed his competitors and won the first best, in a jojg, in 2.48.

The second heat in the pony race resulted in a pretty race between Dandy and the Mouse, the latter just managing to acramble home the winner by a nose in 0:30½.

The trotting pointer, Ned, driven by Ed Connolly, Jr., and a well-known local pony, driven by Ed Ryan, Jr., then essayed to trot the first heat of a quarter mile race, but the pony was not in it and his canine competitor easily outtrotted him in 0:50½.

The second heat of the gentlemen's road race proved to be a mere exercise jog for Caliph, who won with ease, in 2:46.

A match race between a couple of unknown ponies, at a quarter of a mile, was the next event, but a mean-looking bay simply ran away from his gray opponent, and won under a pull in 0:23½.

After Ned, the trotting dog, had trotted an exhibition eighth of a mile, Vendome and Crawford ran off a couple of heats at a quarter of a mile, but the former so exily outclassed h's opponent as to remoye all possibility of it being classed a race, and the day's "enjoyment" was at an end.

These examiners investigate and report to the recorder of titles: First, whether the description of the land is definite and clear; second, whether the applicant is in undisputed possession; third, whether he is justly and equitably envitled to possession; fourth, whether the evidence of his title is so clear as to justify the conclusion that he cannot be ousted by ejectment. If the applicant cannot satisfy the examiners upon these points, his application is refused. Defective titles, where the applicant is in possession, may, in some cases be perfected. In such cases the official recorder gives public notice, and unless a caveat is filed within a fixed time by some one claiming the right of possession or ownership, the title of the person in possession becomes indefeasible. If a caveat is filed, registration is suspended until it is either withdrawn or set aside by a final judgment of a court. The land certificates are in duplicate. One is held by the owner of the land, the other remains in the recorder's office. Transfers are made by the cancellation of the old and the issuance of a new certificate. Whatever modification may be made of the system for the purpose of adapting it for use in California, it is plain that before a public official certificate of title can be issued the title will have to be judicially investigated and declared by some authority sanctioned by the constitution. It will at least be necessary to judicially ascertain: First, who is entitled to the possession of each piece of land. Second, practical difficulties of great magnitude will be encountered. SOURCE OF THE DIFFICULTIES. The patent to the pueblo lands was issued to the city of Los Angeles August 4, 1866. The first patent was defective and a corrected one was issued August 9, a corrected one was issued August 9, 1875. The city applied for the confirmation of sixeen square leagues; the patent was issued for four square leagues. The first survey of the city lands was made in 1849 by Ajeut. E. O. C. Ord of the "United States army. The second survey, of what are known as the thirty-five-acre donation lots, was made by Hancock in 1854. The level portion of the city was laid out by Ord in regular blocks, 330x600 feet, with eighty-foot north and south and sixty-foot east and west streets. In these blocks the lots were 120x165 feet and they were so described in deeds to purchasers from the city.

From the time of the conquest onward the authorities continued to sell city lands. During the years 1853 and 1854 there was quite a "boom," and many sales were made of lands that were without the limits of the four-square leagues that were

When the patent was issued these outside lands were patent was issued these outside lands were lopped off the map of the city with a pair of scissors. The purchasers of the city lands from time to time were permitted to locate themselves. Instead of locating according to the official surveys they usually located according to surveys of their own. The consequence was that they not only frequently did not get possession of the particular pieces their deeds called for, but they also frequently took possession of more land than their deeds called for. Lots and tracts were located and taken possession of without regard to the streets as then established. Purchasers of tracts subdivided and sold them. chasers of tracts subdivided and sold them. The subdivisions when sold were misdescribed by metes and bounds, and purchasers received deeds calling for one piece and actually got possession of another. In some cases the deeds of the tract from the city contained a misdescription, or no description at all, and in some cases more land was sold out of blocks by the recorded plats than they were found by the recorded plats than they were found.

In the case of public land that is located and described by government survey, the adjudication of titles necessary to prepare them for being certified of record would not involve any very great difficulties. But as regards lands embraced within Mexican grants either to pueblos or persons, and which were patented after confirmation by the Land Commission of 1851, the case is very different. All the city lands, lots and blocks are parts of the Mexican grant to the pueblo, and in applying the Torrens system to them

SILK CULTURE.

ITS PROGRESS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The Growth of Worms-Interesting Experiments and Encouraging Results in San Diego County.

SAN DIEGO, Jan. 10 .- (Special Correspondence.) The attention of silk culturists has been directed to Southern Cali-fornia possibilities by the statement of Times of January 1, 1895, wherein she gave a recapitulation of her experience in raising silk in San Diego, based on actual raising silk in San Diego, pased on actuar results obtained at her home on Logan avenue. During 1894 she secured 10,000 cocoons, yielding 300 to 1800 yards of silk fiber each, in a room of 7x9 feet. As to the profits of silk culture, Mrs. Wiltrees, the white mulberry being the best, produces enough leaves to feed 260,000 matured worms for thirty to thirty-five matured worms for thirty to thirty-five days, four times a year. During thirty to thirty-five days 260,000 worms produce enough eccoons to furnish 173 pounds of raw silk, and four times a year the product amounts to 692 pounds. This silk, according to its fineness, is worth from $3.50 to $6 per pound. The silk raised by Mrs. Williams sells for $5.80 per pound. Five people are needed to care for 260,000 worms. That is, five women could care for them. At $5.80 per pound, 620 pounds would sell for $4013, or $300 for each woman for nine months' work, as the season is embraced in nine months. At the lowest price for raw silk, $3.50 per pound the return per acre for five people would be $2422, or $487 per woman.

This gentleman pronounced the silk as being of the finest quality. His belief is that Southern California offers a lucrative field for silk culture on a practical basis, especially for women of refinement. Mrs. Williams is a woman of culture, and her accomplishments in raising 100 crops of worms during 1894, in a period of nine months, demonstrate conclusively what can be done in silk culture here.

Some of them overlap, as, for instance, thoose upon lots 9 and 10 in the purtheast corner, and the incomplete triangle shown on lots 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17. The south line of this triangle seems to have started down town, but got no further than acroes the extreet.

Plat No. 4 shows the same as it appears upon the plats in the Assessor's office in accordance with which taxes are assessed and paid. The dotted lines show the original recorded plat. The black lines show the block and the lots as they are assessed to different owners.

It will be seen from this plat that, according to the original recorded plat, by which the subdivisions were originally sold, lot-owners are in possession of a portion of the street on the south and west sides a portion of the lots is being used as the street, and the lot-owners on the east side are in possession of a portion of the rear ends of the lots on the west side.

Another plat might be made of this block which would show that at least some of the cocupants are not in possession of the property described in their deeds.

SOCIETY PEOPLE WHO PLAY AT LIVING WHIST.

A Pretty Performance—What Will be Done at the Churches—The Restaurant Cases—Per-sonal Items.

PASADENA, Jan. 12.—(Special Correspondence.) The spectacle of "Living Whist," presented at the operahouse Friday evening and this afternoon, was a social and artistic success. The audience at the first performance was not as large as was expected, but it was a fashionable one, as was also that at the matinee. The one, as was also that at the matther. The proscentum and boxes, were appropriately decorated with emblems of the card deck, and the beautiful auditorium made to look even more than usually attractive. The music for the occasion, furnished by the Hotel Green Orchestra, was up to the high and was continuous from the overture to he finale. The spectacle, when presented rithout a hitch or break, as it was in this without a hitch or break, as it was in this instance, is a pretty one, of especial interest to those who play or understand the game of whist. The performance opened with the actors marching upon the stage, clad in costume representing the fifty-two cards of a deck—the kings, queens and lacks in royal toggery, the ladies and gendemen representing the spot cards being neatly dressed, and having the hearts, illamonds, clubs and spades displayed upon freeses and sashes.

neatly dressed, and having the hearts, dlamonds, clubs and spades displayed upon dresses and sashes.

The four players, Messrs. J. S. Torrance and L. J. Huff, and Misses Ethel Graham and Grace Monroe, had places at the four corners of the stage, and before them marched in various evolutions all the actors in the game until they shuffled and divided into four ranks. All was performed to the music of the orchestra, and the cutting and "dealing" of the pack, by Misses Graham and Monroe respectively, introduced the first dances, both being gragefully done. As the "play" proceeded the various "cards"—ladies or gentlemen as it happened—danced to the center of the stage, the four "cards" of each trick performing different dances, one of the multi-difficult, and all very pretty. The ladies of some of the "tricks" displayed surprising proficiency in stage dancing; and capityated the audience. The four jacks were grotesque, and their Iudierous antics evoked smiles, sometimes laughter. The kings and queens were the personification of dignity, as the spot cards were of grace and agility. In good looks and skill in dancing, the players all had been admirably chosen, and the dainty gowns of the ladies and conventional black suits of the gentlemen were becoming to each wearer. Several encores were called and some responded to with brief repetition. The ausniess of the Tuesday Evening Club, Mrs. Henry Neill of Santa Ana Loses Her Mind—Gen-eral News Notes.

SANTA ANA, Jan. 12.—(Special Correspondence.) Mrs. Henry Neill of this city has been sadly afflicted for some time past, being partly bereft of her reason. At times she has become so despondent that the family has had cause to fear for her safety, and have therefore watched her very carefully. But Friday evening she suddenly left her home, and, in a fit of melancholly, wandered about for some time before she was found and returned time before she was found and returned to the family, who were hunting far and near for her. Her unfortunate condition is attributed to the protracted strain upon her mind, occasioned by the illness of her daughter, May, who has been a sufferer from heart trouble for several months.

Whether or not this information has been correctly carried to the gentleman referred to is not now positively known, but the gentleman is sufficiently exercised over the matter to place a guard of armed men around his house every night. This has been done for the past several nights, and will, no doubt, be continued until some disposition of the horde of criminals that are at the present time in the community, is made in some manner. The feeling here is becoming more and more in favor of some unusual measure being adopted to rid the county of this dangerous element.

ANAHEIM.

ANAHEIM, Jan. 12.—(Special Correspondence.) Now that the electric dight system in Anaheim is an assured fact, and work has actually been started on the enterprise, the laying of new sidewalks is attracting considerable attention. At the last meeting of the City Trustees C. E. Groat was awarded the contract to put down an eight-foot sidewalk on both sides of Los Angeles street, from Center to Cypress streets and it is understood that this order will be followed by others in a very short time until the city will be considered well supplied with walks, especially on the business streets. The new City Trustees are putting their best foot forward and, as a result, Anaheim is awakening from the slumber through which she has peacefully rested in years gone by.

CHEAPER FOOD.

Such is the Cry at Present All Along the Line.

the Line.

(Oakland Tribunc:) Chasper food is the cry nowadays all along the line. It is not restricted to the poor only. It is heard through the domiciles of the middle classes and well up among those who are well-to-do. The process of industrial and financial readjustment has entered largely into domestic economies. How far it extends into the social organism may be better understood when we cite the utterance of a citizen of ample means who has been living in ease and comfort on the proceeds of the snug fortune which he made in the haleyon days of the State, and which is securely invested: "Thirty and which is securely invested: "Thirty he made in the haleyon days of the State, and which is securely invested: "Thirty cents per pound for fish! That is more than three times the price of beef! There is no sense in it! Fish ought to retail at 5 cents per pound!" That citizen expressed two things in his running comments on the price of fish: First, that those who are far above want as well as those whose means are fish: First, that those who are far above want as well as those whose means are limited, are taking an active interest in the cost of the necessaries of life. Second, that fish, which is in every other seaboard State the poor man's meat, is inordinately dear here, and owing to its outrageously high price takes rank among the luxuries of the table.

The State and the Federal governments have been for many years past spending large sums of money in the development of the fisheries of the Pacific Coast, so as to make fish food abundant and cheap. The rivers and lakes and bays of the State have been stocked with the best food fishes of Eastern waters. The native food fishes have been protected and propagated for the same purpose. And an a result every river that flows to the sea, every bay that opens on the ocean and every roadstead and shoal on the coast is teeming with the best and largest food fishes of the two great oceans that lave the continent, and of the rivers that drain into them. But salmon sells today at the same price per pound at which it was retafied in the flush days of twenty years ago, and the delicate food fishes of Eastern waters that were transplanted here by the State for the poor man's benefit never' get beyond the rich man's table, and are furnishing a harvest only for the fisherman and the fishmonker.

THE PROSPECTOR.

Few people recognize the prospec eing a factor of any importance in the being a factor of any importance in the development of our resources. In fact, few people have any knowledge of the prospector beyond a vague, indefin-able impression of a red-whiskered, red-shirted individual, who varies his frequent "rich strikes" with interludes of high old times, illuminated with jags of carmine hue and punctuated with pistol shots.

hue and punctuated with pistol shots.

The genuine prospector is not of this kind, but is a modest, patient, brave, unssuming man, who, profane though he may be, lives near to Nature and to God.

The bravado and coward is not a true prospector; he is a human coyote, but, sad to say, he makes the most noise, and is generally accepted as being the genuine article, instead of only the imitation.

The grauine prospector, is the frontiers-

A good outfit is a matter of paramount importance to the prospector. One or two strong burros to pack the camp outtwo strong burros to pack the camp outfit and grub, and possibly one to ride. A camp outfit, consisting of canteens, tent, blankets, ficavy canvas sheets to spread under and over the bed, to shield from the rain or the cold, piercing winds of the high plateaus; frying pan, coffee pot and Dutch oven, with perhaps a tin pan in which to mix bread; knife and fork, tin spoons and a small coffee mill, complete the necessities. Cups are supplied by empty milk and tomato cans, as are also various cooking utendis. The canteens must be large and well made, and covered with a blanket, to protect the water from heat and cold.
The provisions invariably include plenty

heat and cold.

The provisions invariably include plenty of bacon and red beans, the "frijoles" of commerce. The white beans are not sustaining nor nourishing, or at least you can find no prospector who thinks they are. Canned tomatoes are another necessity. Prospectors colaim that a quart of canned tomatoes will allay thirst for a longer lime than twice the amount of ware some dried fruit, rice, and, when they can be procured, potatoes. Bacon grease takes the place of lard. Gold pan, horn spoon, poll pick, hammer and drills, some giant powder, caps and fuse, to open any ledge which gives good surface indications. No great amount of giant powder is carried upon a mere prospect trip, but only sufficient to do work enough to determine whether a location is worth a second visit.

THEN OFF AND AWAY.

THEN OFF AND AWAY.

Where? That depends upon the prospector's notion, for notion it is. Sometimes it is in quest of some fabulous lost mine, such as the "Pegleg," which never has been and never will be discovered, but oftener it is into some locality through which the prospector thinks runs a mineral belt. Old prospectors know the location and trend of every mineral belt in the country, from British Columbia down, and belt. Old prospectors know the location and trend of every mineral belt in the country, from British Columbia down, and can tell you where some particular belt should pass through any particular locality. Once in the chosen locality, camp is made at some spring or "tank," and the burros are turned loose to browse on the reinty herbage. To keep them from wandering sway, they are fed scraps of grubleft from each meal, with an occasional lump of sugar. In spite of these inducements, the burros often take the "back track," and a tramp of thirty to fifty miles must be induged in before they can be overtaken and brought back.

Once in camp, the prospector's work begins, and the days are spent in tramping over the hills and canyons, chipping rocks with the poll pick, or panning the soil in search of placer ground. Bits of rock which look promising are taken to camp and subjected to simple tests to determine the presence of metal, and when these tests result favorably, the ledge from which the rock was taken is again visited and "prospected," and if favorably impressed with it, the prospector makes a location by building a monument of rocks at the place of discovery, and placing in such monument a notice of location, which, for protection, is inclosed in a tin can. He then puts up two center-end monuments, four corner monuments and two center-side monuments, placing a slip of paper in each monument and the name of the mine. Under the United States ming law, a mining claim is 1500 by 600 feet, embracing about twenty acres, but in many mining districts the claims are limited to less than this, and, of course, the prospector, in staking off his claim, is governed by the rules of the district in which his location is made.

Oftentimes many months are spent in prospecting before a single location is made, and many locations do not prove upon investigation to be worth developing, or are abandoned for something more promising, which may afterward prove worthless, while the abandoned claim, relocated by some "tenderfoot," turns out a veritable bonanza.

The fascination of prospecting is irresistible, and the prospector can never be contented to settle down in one locality after he has become thoroughly inoculated with the virus of unrest.

"Up in Bear Valley, two summers ago, I came across a camp where a thin-bearded, bronzed man of about 30 was cutting wood before a small A tent. In the tent were many scientific works, including a set of Encyclopedia Britannica. Engaging him in conversation, I found he was a prospector, who had come in from the desert to let his burros rest and fatten on the grass. He had come down from Pahrumph Valley, across the burning desert in the hottest part of the summer.

"I stopped at Vanderbilt," said he, "and made several locations, one of which I think will prove valuable, but I got tired and moved on, and am now on my way toward Southern Arisona."

I asked him how he liked the desert, and he replied that he liked it better than any other place. "See," said he, as he flung open the front of his shirt, "I wear no clothing when on the desert." His breast was a deep copper color, even to his armpits, and fully bore out his statement. His conversation proclaimed him to be an educated man, and he said his books were a part of his camp outift, and accompanied him wherever he went. He volunteered no other information regarding himself, and his bearing was such as to preclude any questioning, but I have often wondered what could have caused him to choose such a mode of life. Of one thing I am sure; he will follow no other.

Take the prospector and transplant him to the city, give him store clothes and restaurant feed, and, though at first he enjoys the novelty, in about a month the pleasure begins to pall; in two months he is restless; in three months he thinks he needs a change, and in four months forty yoke of oxen could not hold him from going back to the old free life, camp grub and the company of Mother Nature and God's stars.

EXPECTATION

EXPECTATION

Binds him to the wilds. Perhaps tomorrow will bring to him the rich strike of which he has so long been in pursuit; a chance blow has made many a man wealthy, and surely he has as good a chance as any one. Buoyed up by hope, the days and nights lose their loneliness, and time speeds along, until sometimes a life passes with hopes all unrealized. Others do "strike it" and become rich, but they still prospect, and will as long as ers do "strike it" and become rich, but they still prospect, and will as long as they are able to tramp the hills.

To illustrate the uncertainty of prospecting, I will tell an incident that was told to me by an old prospector.

He and his son were prospecting for placer ground, and one evening, after several months of fruitless search, they found themselves in a favorable looking spot. They each took a pan of dirt and panned it out; the father, who was usually the

They each took a pan of dirt and panned it out; the father, who was usually the slowest in panning, got through first, getting only a few colors, so he said to his son: "What's the matter? Hurry up and let's get to camp before dark."

The son said nothing, but gave his pan to his father, and there in the bottom were several small nuggets and considerable corrase gold. When they reached camp they welghed it, and it came to nearly $3. Of course, they were much elated, and thought they had at last struck the spot where they were to make their fortune, the next day they were up bright and where they were to make their fortune, so the next day they were up bright and early, and took their dry washers to the place and started to work.

They put in two weeks, and, after working all the available ground, realized a few cents over $25.

ents over $25.
It just happened that the son had scooped into his pan the richest lot of soil in the whole canyon.

The Rebellion.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

I have just received letters from Korea, Nights." They are surrounded by all the stating that the whole country is in a state of enarchy. The Teng Haks, or rebels, have spring up again in different parts of the kingdom. The Japanese send out troops, to subdue them, but the moment they are conquered in one they are conquered in one place they spring up in another, and they honeycomb even the ranks of the people in Seoul. The he fears assassination more than ever. There are many Koreans who hate every-thing connected with Japan, and as the King is now working in combination with the Japanese troops, he is charged by some with selling out the country. I wrote you some weeks ago of my interview with him. I did not describe his palaces and his court. It would be impossible for any one to have the access to these buildings today which I had while I was in Seoul.

queer characters who make up official Korea. There are soldiers in plum-colored pantaloons and blue coats. There are the King's musicians in yellow, and there are all sorts of gorgeous servants, dressed in bright gowns. Men with paddles for whipbright gowns. Men with pandles for whip-ping the people squat under the walls, their sleeves rolled up to the shoulder and their brawny muscles ready for action. There are gorgeously caparisoned panies, who stamp their feet and neigh. There are lecpard-skin-covered chairs watched by servants in livery, awa't ng the coming out of their owners, who have gone in to see the King. There are lackeys of all sorts, and as you look you see that the "Black Crook" is here outdone. There are no such officials. Here comes one of them on horse back. He has a servant on each side to Korean magistrate and officials.

HOW THE KING IS GUARDED. The King of Korea does all his work by the electric light. He sleeps in the daytime, and receives all his callers at night. There is a wall about twenty feet high, which rups clear around his palace city, and there are watchhouses on top of it in which sentinels stand day and night. Every 300 feet along the outside of the wall there is a little guardhouse about five feet square, which contains two armed solone soldier watches, the other curls himself up like a caterpillar in this well and their day clothes, and they rarely have blankets. The gates which go into the pal-ace city are guarded by soldiers, and there are always servants and officials about steady him as he sits in the saddle. An other servant leads the horse, and he fans himself as he rides through the streets. His gown is of a light blue slik, and he looks clean enough to be esten. I doubt, however, whether investigation would show this to be the case, and it makes me think of the young society lady who, before go-ing to a party, yells down to her mother

"Say, ma, shall I wash for a high or a low-necked dress?" Just behind this man, looking even more corgeous, comes another noble riding on a monocycle, with six men pushing bicycle principle, and it has been in use in Korea for ages. The people go down on their knees as he passes by, and he is undoubtedly a very high official indeed. He had on official boots of black broad-cleth. A fifteen-dollar horsehair cap covers his head, and the leopard skin, which is only permitted to be used by officials, covers the back of his chair. I note that the other officials get out of their chairs when they meet him. This is etiquette in Korea, and it provides that the man of low rank must never be above a man of higher station. As the monocycle apsees him, and his fan drops in dismay He is proud and he doesn't like to get down, but there is no help for it. He is an under-officer, and he cannot tower above the man in the chair. He orders his servants to stop. They lift him off his horse, and he walks along while his superior rides ts how! to all to get out of the way and to bow down before the great man, they are carrying. And they do bow quick. The officials of Korea try not to meet each other on the streets, because of hus which they have to undergo of this nature. One day I saw the King's father cials had to get out and walk in order to do him honor. I could see they were all angry at having to do so.

WHAT RUINED KOREA.

It is these nobles who have ruined Korea. The country is said to be poor, but the officials roll in wealth, and it is a wonder to me where they get all the finest of silk, and the ordinary man of rank who has access to the palace wears a green gown containing enough silk to make a lady's ball dress. The best of hats cost from $10 upward, and everything is high. Their expenses in Many of them carry from ten to a hundred servants with them when they go along the streets, and these are all lodged in their own quarters. A Korean noble's home consists of a number of onestory buildings surrounded by a wall. which, in the city, opens upon the street by a gate, which is so made that you cannot see inside of the yard when it is open. Half of this wall is made up of buildings of one-story rooms, eight feet square, and or how long he will stay there. You can never tell where to find him, and it would be almost impossible to lay a plan for his abduction. He has all the walls of his palvery well. His home is by no means an uncomfortable one, and with its wide veplant is in full blast, every corner will be uncomfortable one, and with its wide ve-as bright at night as it is in the daytime. randahs, its queerly-shaped ridged roofs, in full blast, every corner will be it at night as it is in the daytime, ps in rooms guarded by eunuchs, and its warm rooms, heated by fires uncertainty his officials they are receiving his officials they are reto come into the palace during the and they wait around until His is ready to receive them in the As soon as it becomes dusk the As soon as it becomes dusk the force a consideration. I had an opportunity to get inside of the palace walls once or twice, in addition to the trip which I made through the grounds when I called upon the King. The build-ings are surrounded by a wall, and they are built within pens, each of which contains from two to four acres of space. In going to the King you have to pass thro from six to a dozen buildings, and everywhere you go you meet soldlers and

There are 500 of these bodyguards, and each of them is so strong that he has to lift a bar of iron, six feet ong and weighing 100 pounds, from the his head. This is the test which the soldiers undergo before they are admitted to the guard. If you will straighten out your arm, bend over and take a rod of iro weighing 100 pounds and attempt to lift i you will see something of the wonderful strength these men possess. A number of them are always close to the King, and they surround his chair as he goes from one palace to the other, and as they go they wail out a chant, which means some thing like this: "Soldiers, protect your King.

There is very little known about the government of Korea, and it will be surprising to many people to know that it has a fixed organ ization, and that there are departments in Seoul much like those at Washington These are supposed to control the affair of the kingdom, and in times past the have practically controlled the King. Russia's secret police have been almost | ways deal with princes. Sometimes he all recalled from America. There are two reasons for this—one the fact that Amer-ica has little use for them, the other that the new Czar has made up his mind to follow the example set in New York by G:fflice oppression. The Czar's job was even bigger than Goff's. His predecessors have built up a body more brutal, more corrupt, more detestable in every way, than Tam-many could ever create. What they amount to in Russia will be told further on. What they amount to in America is every whit as interesting.

It is somewhat absurd that they should amount to anything in America. The idea that the Russian autocrat should be able to extend his autocracy in ever so small is unpleasant. But that at least one branch the Russian police system-the pogood deal of strength, has not been denied by any one who knows. Curiously enough it is one of the things about which Superntendent Byrnes-whose magnificent vingreatest police officer in the world-will ay absolutely nothing. That of itself is significant. The Superintendent has a way of talking freely about things which are Sometimes, when some noble has been mixed up with plots against the Czar, he has traveled like a prince in the first cabin of the best steamer. He was heard to remark in the cardroom that he could appreciat the high breeding and education of the Russian nobility, that he had great respect for the magnificent natural resource of that great country, that he admired her army and regarded her navy with wonder; but that he could neither sympathize with nor admire the Russian political plan or police system. The friendship between the two men ripened rapidly, even for a ship poard affair. By the time the voyage had were inseparable. But even that did not shake him off. In fact, it was in Buffalo that he took his most active step. It is, therefore, plain that any action which the present Czar may take will not be so much the abolition of the secret police as the curtailment of the infamous and obnexious practices of the entire force.

To enter into particulars, the present Russian police force, with the Minister of the Interior at their head, controls by means of passports the movements of all the inhabitants of the empire. They keep thou-sands of suspects constantly under surveillance. They ascertain and certify to the courts the liabilities of bankrupts. They conduct pawnbroker sales of unreidentity to pensioners and other persons that need them. They superintend repairs of roads and bridges. They exercise supervision over all theatrical performances concerts, tableaux, theater programs osters and secret advertisements. The uriadniks, or rural State police, are supposed to wear uniforms and are armed with sabers and revolvers. The salaries they receive are simply miserable—from $50 to $100 a year for a private, and from $200 to $300 a year for a chief of a district. $200 to $300 a year for a chief of a district. It goes without saying that they are expected to make up their income by bribery and corruption, and it is unnecessary to state that they generally succeed in doing this to perfection. Russian travelers tell very amusing stories of the great proficiency acquired by the rural police in extorting money from the poor moujik. And although many of these stories have a certain inherent resemblance, and look as if the same dramatis personae were constantly resppearing on the stage in different constantly respecting on the stage in different constantly respectively. ent clothes, one or two of them may be MAKING MONEY WITH A DEAD BABY.

One American traveler, who got into a cance and paddied all the way down a Russian river to the sea, reports an instance when he was stopping at some village or other on the banks of the stream and was sitting, perhaps, on a bench in front of the village tavern. A sleigh was driven up with a police officer in the box seat, which contained as its only other occupant what looked very much like a recumbent human figure, covered with a tarpaulin what looked very much like a recumbent human figure, covered with a tarpaulin or sheet. The officer alighted from his perch and demanded the immediate pres-ence of the village elder. In the mean-time a curious crowd of trembling mou-ilks had gathered around the sleigh with its mysterious burden. The elder was pushed to the front through the throng.

The officer gave him to understand that the mutilated body, which he exposed by pulling off the covering, had been found in the immediate neighborhood of the vil-lage, and indicated that an inspector must be called and an inquest held immediately. To the elder himself it was only too apparent what the meaning of all this was.
All present seemed "to catch on," in vul-

It was not a question of inquest at all, out as to how much money would be required to persuade that particular police officer to move on with that particular dead ody to the next village. And after many hot tears and lamentations and piteou pargainings the least possible sum which would be received was contributed by the bystanders, and the sleigh with its corpse reight moved on.

The person who tells this story indicates that as long as the cold weather lasted this particular police officer had a

Another traveler has another story about corpse, which, in this case, was borne an extemporized litter of pine boughs the door of a well-to-do peasant, and posited on the ground in full sight of the window. The police officer then en-tered the house and informed its horrified occupant that as there was no "deadhouse" in that village he would be obliged to leave the body in the peasant's house until the district surgeon could come and make the post-mortem examination. In vain did the tearful moujik invoke high heaven and bewail the fact that his daugh-ter was to be married the following day, and that no guests would enter the house well knew all the time that there was just one way to extricate himselfrom the dilemma, and that was by satisfy ing the itching palm of the police inspec-tor. So he drew him to one side and suggested a financial conference, in which they compromised on thirty roubles (about $23) and the body was borne along the wide village street on its way to the next village, where the same pantomime was performed, and the largest obtainable amount of hush-money secured from the richest peasant in the town. Lord Macaulay tells a story of an Ital-

MONEY STOPPED HIS LECTURES.

In much the same spirit a Russian traveler describes his finding the zasedatel, or district chief of police, dressed in full uniform, and seated in his office one day with three or four huge quarto volumes of the Svod Zakonof, or collection of Russian laws, lying on the table in front of him. Thirty or forty peasants had been sum-moned, and were stolidly seated on chairs before his desk. The officer informed them that he had received orders from high au-thorities to instruct the people in his dis-trict in the ordinances of the empire. He then opened up one of the big quartos and read perfectly unintelligible laws to erfs the whole of that afternoon, and the serfs the whole of that afternoon, and told them, when the shades of night be-gan to fall, that he desired their presence for a similar purpose the next morning. It is needless to relate that he was delighted to receive, before bedtime, a deputation of villagers, asking him to name the lowest price he would receive to let off from attending his lectures THE POLITICAL POLICE.

Next to the rural police, in point of numbers, but infinitely superior to them in point of ability and adroitness, are the political police. These myrmidons are scat-tered broadcast throughout the empire, but are most numerous in the cities. Little is known of their organization by the general public, and their absolute number, or their rules of action, are equally indefinite quantities. It is well known that they are under the control of the Minister of the Interior, and that they are under the control of the presented principally for the presented. SAN DIEGO, Jan. 11 .- (Special Corre spondence.) The larger part of the family of the late Gen. U. S. Grant now lives in this city permanently, having three charming residences here, occupied by the Grant grandchildren and their parents. Therefore anything pertaining to Mrs. Gen. Grant is of particular interest to the people of Southern California. At present Mrs. Grant lives in the house of Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, on a quiet, fash-ionable street in Washington. The house is built of white carved stone, and has about it an air of comfort and solidity. Following in the footsteps of her famous husband, Mrs. Grant has decided to preher life, the larger part of which will relate to her experiences during the war and afterward. Such a volume, it is believed, will be a valuable supplement to the memoirs of Gen. Grant, and will the memoirs of Gen. Grant, and will have a large sale and earn for the author possibly $100,000. It is a pleasure for Mrs. Grant to talk of her husband. She once said of him: "I was with the general through nearly the whole of the war, and I must say I am fond of the army. I was glad to be with him and he always arranged his headquarters, when possible, in order that I might share his lot. When stationed at Nashville, he sent for me to come, and within a few days he was ordered to another post. He entered the headquarters apparently depressed, and when I told him that some come, and within a few days he was ordered to another post. He entered the headquarters apparently depressed, and when I told him that some of the ladies had remarked that he always ran away when I came, he said that he had been planning all in his power to remain where he was, but that Longstreet's movements forced him to go to the front. In his last Virginia campaign I lived for several fonths in the general's log cabin or the James River. We had waited long and anxiously for the surrender of the Confederate armies, and I remember how gladly he hailed the news that Lee was ready to lay down his sword. The General had a severe headache when the tidings came, but he said that it vanished instantly. He was glad the war was over for the sake of the Southern people. He bore no feeling of animosity toward his opponents, and he has often told me that for the good of the South he wanted to end the struggle. They are people, he once remarked, 'like ourselves. They are brave and patriotic, but hot-blooded and impulsive, and led on by fire-caters. They have struck out wildly, and for their own sakes I wish to bring this war to an end—the sooner the better for both sides, for a divided nation could never live. We must be a union.' And always his expressions were full of feeling that longed to bring the whole nation back to harmony. At the time of the convention, when he was urged as a President?' He was dressing at the time. He looked at me and smiled. 'Really, I don't believe I have any say in the matter,' he laughingly replied. 'But do you thing of the responsibility of giving a satisfactory government to suefi a vast nation—a nation of such diverse feelings and needs?' I asked. 'Well, I would feel that if my country calls me I must obey,' he answered gravely. 'I do believe that the people of the South know me to be a genuine friend, and that they have confidence in the kindness and justice of my course.'"

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—(Special Correspondence.) "The richest church corporation in the world," is the common description of Trinity.

Every business man who goes down Broadway instinctively figures up in mental calculation how much the ground encumbered by the two old graveyards would net under the hammer. He knows that they occupy the most valuable ground in the city of New York, and that the population of churchgoers have drifted miles away up town—in fact, that it is not

HOW TRINITY STARTED.

Trinity Church represents the foundation stone of the church of England in America. The names of the founders and vestrymen and promoters and communicants are the names of the streets of older New York. It is contemporaneous with the British flag that floated over New Amsterdam. The very day that the Dutch flag was pulled down, and the flag of England floated above the Battery fort, the spirit of Trinity appeared, and gobbled up a little of the city lying west of Broadway, between the Battery and Christopher street. For many years it was one-third of the first governor of the province, Fletcher, was as ardent church man, and the first thing he did was to give the Dutch and other inhabitants to understand that the conquest carried with it the established church, and to push the Assembly and the people of New York for its official recognition and maintenance. There

To further put the "parish of Trinity Church" upon its feet the good Queen Anne in 1705, made an additional grant to the corporation by letters patent signed by Lord Cornbury, then Governor of the province, "of a tract of land then called Queen's Fahm, lying on the west side of Manhattan Island and extending from St. Paul's chapel northward along the river to the Skinner road, now Christopher street." This farm was afterward called "King's Farm." and was also known at one time as "Church Farm." It was little else than a farm and lay outside the city walls and was cultivated. But it so supplemented the former grant that the church corporation was then in possession of practically all of that portion of the city lying west of Broadway, between the Battery and Christopher street. For many years it was one-third of the entire city of New York. It is through this tract Church street runs, and the whole has been built up these hundred years.

Immediately following this grant the building of a church was begun and provision was made at the same time for taxing the parish still further to pay for it. Subscriptions didn't come in very fast in those days. The church was therefore a small affair. Some of the money

The first clergyman was one William Vessey, whose name decorates the street lamps hard by St. Paul. He was compelled to go to England for his ordination. While he was away the "Manager" applied to the Assembly and obtained an act of incorporation, and when Mr. Vessey returned a full-fledged priest he found Trinity parish in existence, with a charter of its own and ready for business.

PART OF NEW YORK.

The Rev. Vesey was inducted on Christmas day 1697, being the fifth of the reign of William and Mary. By the charter thus obtained, approved by the Governor of the province and sanctioned by the missions on "all wiefts, wrecks and drift whales," and all that sort of thing went to swell the coffers of the managers. The corporation was gathering impetus for its great financial future.

THE FIRST "NEW" CHURCH.

The new church was small, square edifice that would now be considered common in a country/town, but it was then deemed an imposing structure. "It stands," said a descriptive writer of the day, "very pleasantly upon the banks of Hudson's River, and has a large cemetery on each side, inclosed in front by a planted paled fence. Before it is a long walk, railed out from Broadway, the pleasantest street of any in the whole town."

As enlarged in 1737, it was "about 148 feet long, including the tower and chancel, and seventy-two feet broad, with a steeple 175 feet high." The vestrymen were of the most reputable citizens, and distinguished officials of the British gov-

three complete sets of communion plate bestowed upon it by royalty—one from William and Mary, one from Queen Anne, the other from one of the Georges. People began obligingly to die and leave it something. About this time its original rector, Mr. Vesey, died also and was succeeded by Rev. Barclay, in 1746. We know all about Barclay by reason of his street, which he left behind him near Vesey's.

Vesey's.

TRINITY'S OFFSPRING.

In time its congregation got too big for Trinity, and a church of "Ease" was projected. This was erected on Beekman and Cliff streets—Messrs. Reade, Ludlow, Beekman, Clarkson, Livingston, Murray, Chambers, Desbrosses and other gentlemen, who are remembered by New York streets, being in this real estate deal. The corporation paid £645 ($3225) for six lots now probably worth more than six times as much singly. This chapel was boyally called St. George's, and was off cut stone, modeled upon a soap box, with a cake of soap representing the tower. It was burned down and restored the following year.

A charity school was built near Trinity in 1748, and it, too, immediately succumbed to fire. Trinity itself wearly shared the same fate at the time. The public sympathy was greatly stimulated by these misfortunes, and a goodly sum of money was raised to repair damages. A new charity school rose on Rector and Greenwich streets, a school afterwards converted into the New York Protestant Episcopal School. Ground was donated for the beginning of King's College, now Columbia University, which ground has so increased in values as to afford a large share of the income of the institution. The arrival of Dean Berkeley, and his close friendship for the managers of Trinity, resulted in the founding of the famous Berkeley school, for the support of which the land given by Trinity Turnishes a considerable income.

The building of St. Paul's Chapel, just above Trinity and Broadway, was begun about 1763 and was finished three years later. This was on church ground and was the exclusive and beautiful work of the republic at the Federal building, to give thanks for the success of the patriot cause. And here when in the city he afterwards received the holy communion.

TRINITY'S TRIALS DURING THE REVOTION.

TRINITY'S TRIALS DURING THE REVO-

At the outbreak of the revolution Tripity adhered to the British cause. Washington sent a request to the rectors of St. Paul's and Trinity, asking them to refrain from reading that portion of the Church of England service referring to the King. The excitement in the city was intense, and threats were made of mobbing and sacking the churches unless they should substitute others for the prayers for England and the King. But they refused, and on a cértain Sunday a company of continentais marched into Trinity with loaded guns, and with drum and fife to enforce the command. In the face of this the rector read the usual services, and, it may as well be and with drum and life to enforce the command. In the face of this the rector read the usual services, and, it may as well be said, was not harmed or even interrupted. Public feeling ran so high, however, that the vestry concluded to close the churches for the time, until the return of the King's troops. Later a series of incendiary fires broke out and Trinity was reduced to ashes along with the charity school on Rector street. St. Paul's and King's College narrowly escaped the same fate.

The close of the revolution found the two congregations worshiping together in St. Paul's, and the corporation in financial embarrassment. But it quickly recovered, and the spring of .187 saw a new Trinity church under construction on the old site. In this special pews were set apart for the President of the United States and the Governor of the State of New York. Trinity became more liberal, and not only adopted the change of prayers, but gave magnificent donations of land to all the Presbyterian churches of the city. In 1796 it was discovered that serious defects existed in the roof and walls of the new church, and after many attempts to remedy them the church was pulled down. The present beautiful and substantial edifice was erected in its place and it stands today a rare specimen of church architecture. Though somewhat enlarged and improved within and without in succeeding years, it is, in the main, as first built.

TRINITY, LIBERALITY AND EXTEN-

corporation also built St. Mark's and endowed it with conspicuous liberality besides contributing to the Presbyterian besides contributing to the Presbyterian churches as already noticed and began in 1802 a systematic extension of its own establishment. It purchased a few lots in the "Lispenard meadows," then declared by some of the managers not worth fencing in, and erected the chapel of St. John, endowing it in the usual way. About the same time the vestry undertook the establishment of an institution for the promotion of religion and learning, the founding of a theological library and endowed additional fellowships in Columbia College. Lots on Barclay, Hudson, Murray, Warren and Greenwich streets went in endowment funds. All of these have greatly increased in value and bring substantial revenues.

Under Trinity's inspiring touch Grace Church rose in permanent leveliness to gladden the eye of subsequent generations.
The latter get some twenty-five valuable lots and other financial aid from time to the control of the time, until it proved such a beggar that Trinity refused to further support it. Other valuable ground was transferred in 1810 and 1815 to the use of free schools, and for the use of the city in the Washington market. Additional ald was given St. Georges, which burned down shortly after, and was then rebuilt by Trinity. TRINITY'S LATER WORK.

During the service of the present rec-tor, Dr. Morgan Dix, Trinity has built five chapels additional and many other buildings devoted to religious and secular instruction. St. Chrysostom's, St. Augus instruction. St. Caryspesson s, St. Augus-tine's, St. Agnes's, St. Cornelius and St. Luke's owe much to Trinity; while a schoolhouse on Trinity place and Thames street, for the Trinity schools; a parish building back of St. Paul's, giving room to the schools of that church; offices for the rectors of both churches, and for the school schoolhouse on Trinky place and Thames street, for the Trinity schools; a parish building back of St. Paul's, giving room to the schools of that church; offices for the rectors of both churches, and for the several priests connected therewith, and for the home of the vestry and corporation itself; a parish building for St. Augustine's on Houston street; a similar building for each of the other new churches; and a parish hospital on Varick street, all bear practical evidence of the present spirit of the corporation. It has established schools, finduding day and night, training schools, kindergartens, cooking schools and schools of manual training. Indeed, such a variety and number of societies, industrial, benevolent, religious, etc., have sprung up around every one of Trinity's branches that it is impossible to enumerate them here.

In the year book of 1894 it is officially justed that the income of the seven churches under Trinity's patronage from pew rents does not amount to more than one-twentieth part of the expenses, and that Trinity pays the other nineteen-twentieths. When we add to this the support given to various missions, grants of allowances to societies, expenses on corporation property, and general church expenditures, it is not difficult to see where the money of "the richest church corporation" goes; and when we remember that Trinity started out in 1710 with a small collection of negro slaves and servants as their and their children in the work of religion and secular education, with one priest and an imported schoolmaster, it can be truthfully said that she has kept fully abreast of the times and multiplied her talents. HOW TRINITY MANAGES ITS ESTATES.

Trinity is sensitive at being called 'rich.'' Every year or two it gets up and apologizes. Usually this apology is in the year book; this year 'it is from the pulpit and by the rector himself. In the year book of 1874 it protests that its income is not more than haif a million, and that there are several individuals in New York who have more money. But some ten or twelve years later it is found that the same statement is given of the income, although all other real property, in its neighborhoods has doubled in value. Noth-chosen by Trinity, one by him and a third by these two. Whatever valuation that board puts upon the improvements will be relimbursed to the tenant if he does not renew the lease for another twenty-one years. In each of the leases is a cast-iron clause that the place shall not be used as a slaughter-house, bakery, yitner's, butcher-shop or liquor store. As Trinity never builds it offers fair inducements for men desiring to pay ground rent. As Trinity does not sell, if other people don't come forward and pay ground rent and hulld the property goes into decay. For Trinity never repairs either.

Trinity Church Tenements LOS ANGELES, Jan. 12, 1894.—(To the Editor of The Times:) The columns of our daily press have contained from time Editor of The Times:) The columns of our daily press have contained from time to time attacks upon the corporation of Trinity Church, New York, which is well known to be one of the wealthest in the world. From the increase of property valuation in that city, Trinity, a parish of the Episcopal church in the diocese of New York, finds itself the fortunate possessor of an estate variously estimated in valuation at from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, and yielding no inconsiderable revenue. It is not my purpose to go into the various charitable works in which this parish engages. Suffice to say that every cent of its actual revenues, together with a vast amount annually contributed by members of that parish, finds its way into the various charitable, philanthropic, educational, benevolent and religious channels for which this parish is noted, not only in New York, but through the length and breadth of the United States, About three or four years ago I saw a copy of one of the annual reports issued by that corporation, and I was fairly startled at the farreaching philanthropies which have their home and center in Trinity Parish, New York.

Now it seems to be a settled policy among some of our would-be reformers and socialistic agitators, to consider all persons or corporations who are possessed of wealth to be a legitimate subject of attack, by a series of well-arranged and periodical diatribes. It matters not persons or corporations who are possessed of wealth to be a legitimate subject of attack, by a series of well-arranged and periodical diatribes. It matters not whether this wealth has been obtained by the legitimate increment of values, or by those questionable and dishonorable methods frequently pursued by large business corporations, the jaundiced eye looks upon it in the same light. The increase in valuation of a church lot is as reprehensible to these parties as the increase of a merchant's wealth by methods of business piracy and plunder.

The corporation of Trinity Parish, New York, has been annoyed from time to time by pestilent attacks of this kind. The latest attack is one which has exceeded all others in virulence, has been better timed, and has apparently on the surface a reasonable justification. The daily and weekly press has teemed with sensational dispatches, over which heavy headlines have appeared regarding. "Trinity's Saloons," "The Liquor-sellers of Trinity Parish," "Trinity Tenements; etc., etc. It. is for the purpose of showing how unwarranted these attacks have been that I take the liberty of writing to your widely-circulated journal.

The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, the scholarly rector of Trinity Parish, while, with characteristic candor, asking for a suspension of judgment until the corporation of Trinity makes a report to the State Legislature of New York, finds it necessary to put matters straight before the public hastily swallows the charges and conveniently ignores the tardy action of the Legislature, which will consider the charges a few months later. It is well known how eagerly the public reads sensational charges; it is equally well known how the disproof of them is ignored. Dr. Dix in a letter to the New York press, which only a few have done him the courtery to consider, points out the following facts:

So far as liquor-selling on property owned by Trinity is concerned, he quotes the regulation of that corporation. For the last twenty years, each lessee of a plece of Trinity property has been required to sign a covenant and agreement that no spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall be sold on the premises. There are seven places owned by the parish where liquor is sold today, but these are places where long leases had been made, and those leases have not yet expired. When they expire, the same requirement will be exacted in their cases.

So far as the death rate in Trinity's tenements are concerned, Dr. Dix shows that their cases.

So far as the death rate in Trinity's tenements are concerned, Dr. Dix shows that the corporation has always been governed by the City Board of Health, and whatever suggestions they saw fit to make were always promptly carried out. Further, these tenements are not tenements in the strict sense of the word, inasmuch as they were not built to be used as tenements. They were built by parties who had leased the corporation land, as dwellings, and had reverted to the corporation. They are the usual type of a New York dwelling-house of two generations ago, two or three-story usual type of a New York aweiling-house of two generations ago, two or three-story structures, and which now accommodate three or four poor families. These dwellings are in a portion of New York which in a short time must be given over to business, and the corporation of Trinity does not deem it wise to build modern tenement structures, which, in the course of a few years, must be torn down to make room for business blocks. Some of the parties in these "tenement-houses" not only receive their dwelling-places rent free, but are in more than one instance supported by the charitable funds of Trinity parish.

It may be that the sensational reporter of the New York press, whose weekly wages is measured by the size of his "scoop," irrespective of any consideration for truth and accuracy, may be to blame for this unwarranted attack upon one of the historical and philanthropic justitutions of a great city, but it is much more open to suspicion that the attack has been inspired by that tribo of political harpies, who, under the pseudonym of "Socialists," would foul that which they cannof control. The editor of the Evening Pog, with a desire to be fair and impartial, delegated a reporter to investigate the charge, and the result may be seen in the editorial remarks of that paper. It says:

"We had proposed waiting before saying anything on the subject until the official reports appeared and the evidence was published in extenso, knowing the disposition of the newspapers to make it hot for a rich ecclesiastical corporation. But so many people are now excited by the bellef that this body (Trinity Corporation) is keeping its tenement-houses in a disgraceful condition, and that the Evening Post is keeping silent about it because Trinity Church is 'rich and fashionable,' that we are driven into saying that, as far as we can make out, about nine-tenths of what is written about Trimity Church tenements is nuriue, and the other tenth is inaccurate. Nearly all the tenements is has been credited with, as will be seen by the articl

I'm so little, you know, that it doesn't take much to tire me. Of course if you don't like the story I can stop at any time. It's no trouble to me to stop. Just wink your eye at me twice and I'm mum."

"Oh, we don't want you to stop," said sweetest Susan.
"No, don't stop," remarked Mr. Rabbit, drowsily, "because then everybody gets to talking, and I can't doze comfortably.
Your stories are as comforting to me as a feather bed."

"The Prince waited and waited and pined and grew thinner. But just as matters were getting to be very serious, indeed, an old, man appeared in the palace park leading a beautiful white cow with jet

And in a moment she had the ring.

"Then I'll add a bolster to the bed," exclaimed Mr. Thimblefinger. He hesitated a moment and then went on with the story:
"Of course Evlen didn't know what to do when her grandmother threw the gold ring from the window and pushed her from the room. She went back to her bed and lay down, but she couldn't sleep. After awhile daylight came, and then she dressed herself and went down into the garden to hunt for the ring. She searched everywhere, but the ring was not to be found.
"Now the ring could have been supported by the ring was not to be found."
"The prince forgot his dignity and hunter the servence of the ring was not to be found."

Now, the ring could have been found ry easily if it had been where it fellen Evien's stepmother threw it from the ndow. But that night a tame crow, beging to be Prince of that country, was sailing in one of the trees in the gar-window. But that night a tame crow, was roosilint in one of the trees in the gardon."

"Oh, was it a sure enough Prince?" asked Sweets Susan.

"Why, certainly," replied Mr. Thimble-finger, with great solemnity. "A make-believe prince could never have reigned in that country. The people would have found him out and he would have been put. In the calaboose. Well, this tame crow that belonged to the prince had wandered off over the fields and had gone so far away from the palace that it was unable to get back before dark, and so it went to bed in one of the trees growing in the garden behind the house where Er in lived.

"It course, as soon as morning came, the crow was wide awake, and ready for any mischief that might turn up. It flew to the ground, hoping to find something for breakfast, and hopped about, searching in the leaves and grass. Suddenly the crow saw the shining ring on the ground and picked it up and turned it over. What could it be? The crow's curipsity was such that it forgot all about breakfast. It selzed the ring in its beak and went flopping to the palace. It was so early in the morning that the palace was closed, but the crow flew straight to the Prince's window and beat his wings against it until some of the attendants came and opened it, when the crow walked in with great dignity.

"The Prince rose from his bed and took the ring from the crow, but it was so hot that he made haste to drop it in a basin until it was as large as the bottom and within the circle it made the picture-of a beautiful girl, standing by a mik-white cow. There were two peculiarities about the milk-white cow. Her ears were as black as jet and her horns shone and glittered as if they were made of gold. "The Prince was entranced. He gazed at the beautiful-picture long and lovingly, and the crow sat on the rim of the basin and chuckled as proudly as if it had painted the picture. The girl was the loveliest the Prince had ever seen, and the cow was surely the most beautiful of her kind. The Prince's attendants uttered exclamations of delight when they saw the picture, and his ministers, when they were sent for, were struck dumb with astonishment.

"If the bird could only speak," cried the Prince.

"But the crow went chuckling about the room, saying to itself: What a fool a Prince must be who cannot understand my sispile language!"

"The Prince gazed at the picture framed by the gold ring for a long time when he eturned to take it from the water; as he did, so it shrunk to its uatural size, and the picture of the beautiful girl and ite cow with the golden horns disappleared, and the ring no longer burnt his fingers. He dropped it in the basin once more, but it remained a simple gold ring, and the picture failed to appear again.

"The Prince was disconsolate. He remained in the palace and refused to go out. He moped and pined until the family doctor was called in. The doctor fussed about and felt of the Prince's pulse and looked at his tongue, and said that a change of air was necessary; but the Prince said he didn't want any change of air, and wouldn't have it. In fact, he said he didn't want any air at all, and he wouldn't take any pills or powders, and he wouldn't drink any mustard plaster put on the more medicine he took the worse off and the wouldn't have any mustard plaster put on the wouldn't have in love, and he knew that the more medicine he took the worse off and the wouldn't have any mustard plaster put on the prince didn't want it, and wouldn't have it. in their efforts to reach the prince, who was moping in his room. As they ran they cried:

"The cow with the golden horns has come! The cow with the golden horns has come! The prince forgot his dignity and hurried out to see the cow with the golden horns. The old man came leading her and she was, indeed, a beautiful creature. Her head and limbs were almost as delicate as those of a deer, and her eyes were large and soft. Her body was as white as snow, her eyes glistpeed like black silk, and her golden horns shone in the sun. The old man bowed low as he led the beautiful cow forward.

"I wouldn't make much of a bride mywelf, your Majesty,' he said, 'I have brought you the cow with the golden horns. She might find you the bride that I failed to bring you."

"I fear I shall have no such good fortune,' replied the prince, 'but I think you have proved to me that I am not dreaming. How shall I reward you?"

"I ask no reward, Your Majesty, I only ask the privilege of taking away my cow with the golden horns whon you have found your bride."

"When the prince had given his promise the old man said: 'You have a ring, Your Majesty. Let this ring be placed on the left horn of the cow. The girl or woman that is able to remove this ring will be the bride you are wishing for. Every morning the cow with the golden horns will appear here on the lawn and remain until night falls. Mr. Thimblefinger paid no attention to the interruption.

"But how do you know," asked the prince, 'that the right one will come to get the ring?"

"How do I know that Your Majesty has the ring?" the old man answered.

"This seemed to satisfy the Prince, who caused it to be announced all through his kingdom that he would choose for his bride the girl or woman who would take the ring from the golden born of the cow.

bride the girl or woman who would take the ring from the golden horn of the cow.

"Of course, there was a great commotion among the ladies when this announcement was made, and nearly all of them tried to take the ring from the golden horn of the cow. Some said they tried it just for fun, and some said they tried it just for fun, and some said they tried it just for curiosity; but all of them failed. Even Evlen's stepmother tried, and then she made her daughter try, but when the daughter touched the ring it burnt her so that she screamed. And then some of those who had tried and failed turned up their noses and said it was a trick." "Evlen had never thought of trying. She had seep the Prince and admired him, yet she had no idea of giving up before all these people. But as soom as her stormother started for the palace with her daughter, there came a knock at the door. Even opened it, and there, standing before her, was the old man who had carried her to the Thunder's house, and to the Jumping-off Place. She was very glad to see him, and told him so, and he was just as glad to see her.

"Why don't you go and get your ring?" he asked.

"It is found," he said. "I have placed it on the golden horn of the cow that stands near the palace door. You must go and get it."

"I have nothing to wear, she replied.

"Then the old man tapped on the wall and called:

There will be nothing of the mystifying or buncombe about this sale, no "fire. smoke, water, going-out-of-business, overloaded sacrifice." We simply inject the virus of "Price Deduction" into this business for one month.

The most precise price preparations have been made - the furniture figures of this house are always as low as the least of the other stores; in many cases they are far below the price range of this market.

Notwithstanding the lowness of prevailing prices, we shall for this sale make most unusual deductions from the current rates. Every article marked in plain figures and the same price to all-comers; if for $5 or $500.

Briefly told, every piece of carpet, every rug, every article of furniture will share alike in this reduction. There is no old stock to be worked off. Not a dollar's worth now offered can be replaced by more desirable goods.

In giving notice of this most important trade occurrence, your attention is directed to the fact that every transaction made at "Red Letter Sale" prices must be closed with instant spot cash.

In the conduction of this sale, as at all times, every promise of our advertising will be faithfully fulfilled with the buying public. Under-telling rather than over-telling will guard every statement of this house.

We look forward to a grand response; We look forward to more new friends for this house; to a mighty host of new customers, as we carry the banner of low prices full high advanced,

THE EVOLUTION OF CALIFORNIA

It was in 1848 when the gold rush first began in this State. It was then a land comparatively unknown to the people even of this country. To its climatic wealth and to its agricul-tural possibilities the whole world stranger. For men to drift hither from the East was a vast undertaking. The dangers attending the trip were as numerous as those which surround the explorer today plunges into the untraveled wilds of Africa. The hostile tribes of Indians occupying the unsubjugated portions the continent, and holding the path which Empire must traverse in westward march, were savage and treacherous. There were vast deserts and untrodden wildernesse into which the ploneer must plunge; there were arid, waterless wastes where death forever followed in the track of the caravan, and bleaching human bones marked the way which men had taken in their search for this new Eldorado of the West.

But it was gold alone that men sought in those early days of occupation. They never dreamed of the agricultural wealth to be developed, of the unnumbered variety of fruits that could be grown here, nor of th perpetual summer of growth which existed in this golden clime.

That was arid-looking soil that was first upturned by the miner's pick, and those were lonely gulches where he toiled far from home and the com forts of civilization. Instead of the langhter of his children stirring the schoes about him in the falling twilight, he heard the bark of the covote or the flerce howl of the wolf. dry, bare summer hills seemed to mock his loneliness. His heart was rungry for the green fields of the East, and its orchards of ripening fruits. Here no garden or orchard met his eyes, and it was rarely that he could moisten his parched lips with mission grapes which the padres had planted. The adobe but or the rude cabin were his only shelter, save the skies which shed the dew, or the old oak's branches which spread above m a thick canopy of leaves. There was no sound of the steamship's whistle, no rumbling tread of the iron rse. It was well enough, thought the miner, to come hither and harvest in the rich mines, but to stay, to build up a State—that at first was not

AN IDEAL COMMUNITY.

In an article published in the Amer ican Journal of Politics for Decembe under the title of "A Practical Example in Civics," Thomas W. Haskins of this city argues in favor of a practical example to see what can be done in the line of building up a perfect community. He would have a sultable territory selected for colonization and establish therein an independent county government. Mr. Haskins would have a corporation formed under the laws of any State, but preferably of the State in which the pro posed county is to be located, with a broad charter to buy and sell land, colonize and improve the same, and settle and develop a county. The personnel should be men not only of sufficient capital and intelligence bring the matter to a conclusion, but of such public reputation for business ability, integrity and patriotism as to command public confidence. The perons thus associated should act u a prior agreement, to become a part of the constitution of the incorporation, defining explicitly that the purpose of the company is to colonize a definite territory and assist the setin quicksilver mines, in petroleum and bitumen, and in our beet-sugar protlers to secure homes, cultivate the duction, and almost vast enough to feed the world are our harvests of soil and develop water, build towns and cities, facilitate transportation, wheat and barley, of corn and of and otherwise co-operate with them to subdue the soil and produce and dis-And we need not go unclothed, for tribute wealth. This prior agreement should state definitely under what terms and conditions this is to be yield many millions of pounds of wool lone: the rate of interest to be charged yearly, while "wine that maketh glad on loans or deferred payments, the division of profits, what restrictive clauses, if any, are to be put in deeds rivers. The main object in view is to fur nish homes—productive homes to the millions who are now seeking them. Theoretically, the idea is not a bad one, but there are a great many theo-ries advanced nowadays which are not found to work well in practice. Whenever we begin to think that we have attained our ideal we run up against that stumbling block, human nature. If human nature were different from what it is, if it were perfect or anywhere near perfect, there is no reason why we should not have model communities from one end of the country to the other. In fact the entire nation might be one great model community if only a fair minority of the population came within 75 per cent. of perfection. But we all know that such, unfortunately, is not the case. It is the failure of enthusiastic reformers to recognize the weak side of erring human nature that causes so many of their best laid plans for the amelioration of the human race to miscarry. Their plans are like a delicate piece of machinery that is not arranged to make allowances for changes in temperature, or a compas that is not placed as to be out of reach of large bodies of metal which would influence its movements. The co-operative idea in the settlement of land is, as The Times has fre quently remarked, an excellent one, but it must be co-operation in which there is plenty of scope for the exercising of individual activity. No enterprise of this character will permanently succeed in the United States where the paternal spirit extends beyond a few main and absolutely essential features of the plan. The only exception to this rule is where the mem-bers of a community are bound to gether by strong religious ties, and that a community has held together for any great length of time After all, the fact must not be forgotten that there is a great deal of human nature in folks-also some ussedness.

TO PRESERVE THE FORESTS.

The California Academy of Sciences at a meeting held recently, passed resolutions which were forwarded to Congress, strongly protesting against any infringement upon the forest reserves heretofore set aside by the na tional government, in California. The resolutions declare that the present forest areas are necessary as water sheds, for the protection of the rainfall in the mountain sections to the end that there shall be no decrease in the amount of water necessary for irrigation purposes.

Bills and amendments now pending before Congress propose to eliminate rom the forest reservations all lands which their supporters claim to be more valuable for agriculture than for forest purposes. The resolutions point out that it is easy to procure testimony of any kind needed to insure the destruction of the forests upon such a criterion. There are thousands of acres of good land, not covered by forests, which still remai undeveloped, and it would be little less than suicidal to permit the forest lands to be denuded, while these land remain undeveloped. As the develop ment of these lands proceeds, more over, more water will be needed fo irrigation, and this can be had only by preserving the forest watersheds. resolutions declare that there are no timber lands in any of the forest reservations of California which "are more valuable for agriculture than for timber, watersheds and rec-

By the decision, Bob Johnson, the plaintiff, gets judgment for costs for about $8000. Attorneys' liens against any judgment Johnson might get amount to over $15,000, but they are outlawed and the estates of those who filed them have long since been scattered. And the calves

Writing from San Bernardino, a orrespondent of The Times emphatically denies the statements that have been published in certain quarters to the effect that the people of that com-munity sympathesed with the lawlessness of the railway strikers and conlemned the action of Judge Ross in punishing those law-breakers. the past few weeks out at East Los Angeles Park, and the improvements wrought are quite apparent. Work on the island above the main bridge leading to the conservatory has been completed, and the water turned in, leaving a round tree-covered knoll of perhaps an acre in ex-tent quite surrounded by water, and accessible only by two rustic foot bridges. This spot promises to prove a most popular one with visitors to the park. During the week, posts have been set at the ends of all footpaths which I intersect the drives, the object being to prevent vehicles from being driven in over the borders and flowers beds. The posts are neatly painted, and are provided with sunken boxes, into which they fit and fasten with a key, so that they can be removed at will by the park employees, who frequently have occasion to use the paths in hauling material for the work. The posts are a great protection and convenience, and are the result of the insible only by two rustic foot bridges. This venience, and are the result of the in-genuity of Mr. Mundell, of the park force, Yesterday afternoon while Officer Mc-Keag and his force of sagebrush detec-tives were out in the river bottom hunt-ing "hobos," a man came to the office and asked for an officer to assist in looking up a couple of little children, who, he said, had wandered away from their home somewhere on Downey avenue. A Timely Movement.

The well-known organization of the King's Daughters are working quietly in our midst, and they have accomplished much "in His name" in the way of helping those who needed help. "Lend a hand," is one of the leading mottoes of the organization, and in keeping with it is a new movement which they are now undertaking which will doubtless be undertaking, which will doubtless be halled with delight by many a weary and overtaxed mother. It is no less than the overtaxed mother. It is no less than the proposed opening of a day nursery, where mothers who are obliged to go out to work can leave their little children in the morning in the hands of a competent nurse, feeling that they will be well and carefully cared for, and remain there until they can call for them at night when their day's work is ended. A bright and sunny room has been secured for this purpose in the Eighth Ward. A merely nominal charge will be made for the care given the little ones. Donations would be gratefully received, such as cribs, hammocks, easy chairs, toys and the like, and any one disposed to aid this needed movement in this way, can send any articles they have to donate to No. 2131 Estrella avenue.

Blessed are the Eagle people for once, for the income tax is the least of their troubles. Nobody will nose rers, inspect their books, rummage ng their papers, spit them on the teasting-fork of the inquisitor, find out what they earned last year and what they are going to spend next year; how much money they have in banks, invested in oil wells, water lots, or mesas covered with grease-No browbeating official of Grover Cleveland will chase a member of the Eagle crowd to his perch and make him cough up an income tux, for none of the fraternity has that sort of a cold. You wealthy human fellows, though, must prepare to give up and give up freely. Upset those tin boxes on the counter and let Uncle Sammy's hired man inspect their contents!

Go down to the safe-deposit vault let him see the hoarded bonds and things that you have been pinching and screwing to get your hands for years, and yield up a share of them to support the free traders! Throw wide open to the sleuths of the government your secrets, and let him see the skeletons in your closets! Unbosom yourselves, you pluto-cratic Democrats who voted for the man with the sore toe, and see how women and Mongolians getting off the street-cars backwards apparently touched a raw spot, for the dear creatures continue to write me letters on the subject, the most of them swearing that they "never, neither!"

But one lovely and charming correspondent—she must be lovely and charming, for aren't all ladies like that?—writes me with exceeding good humor that she has set to herself the task of finding out the reason why. She declares, as the result of her observations, that ninety-nine out of every hundred ladies, especially those on the shady side of 40, like servations, that ninety-nine out of every hundred ladles, especially those on the shady side of 40, like herself, (this last I scarcely believe, for she doesn't begin to look it) reach out one hand to catch hold of the post at the end of the car or the seat, and that, almost always, is the one back of the seat upon which the lady has been sitting. As they alight, she says, this draws them around with the face toward the rear end of the car.

My correspondent remarks further:

"Now if the dear creatures would only remember to take a firm hold of the post in front of the seat, there would be no frouble and the men (the mean things) would have to look around for another mystery to solve."

around for another mystery to solve."

In a spirit of good nature and contrition, the Eagle's lady friend further writes:

"One thing in connection with this matter is truly funny: that is, if you tax a lady with having, at some time in her life, stepped off a car backward, she is always indignant and says: 'I know I never did,' but if you will take the trouble to notice, you will find but few exceptions. For my own part I plead guilty, but am firmly confident that I will never do so again."

Surely this is glory enough for one paragraph, to get at least one woman to acknowledge a dark and deadly error and to promise reform. But, girls, there are others.

Let the kinky-headed and fire-eating Let the kinky-headed and fire-eating Jamesy come in out of the tules and go ahead making out commissions for notaries public, colonels with yaller braid all over 'em, and signing pardons. Goodness knows the campaign is over, and everybody is glad enough of it to yell, but Jeems will probably not get onto this for four years, and will keep on splitting the blue empyrean and pawing the ground like a toro from El Toro, for it is the way he is built.

If we can get a governor that will keep still and not monkey with California until it is Illinoised, Coloradoed or Kansased, we will be in great luck; but I'm skeered we haven't got him.

It looks mighty squally to me.

While the new boss of the streets is getting "broke in," let him be careful about riding up and down Spring street in a buggy or he will break his everlasting neck.

There are 'pits, guilles, chuck-holes and chasms gouged out in that thoroughfare until they yawn for victims—and they get 'em, too, if you hear me.

There isn't a day goes by that buggy springs are not broken, along about Hale's dry goodsery, wheels wrenched off, axles broken and people's livers nearly joggled out of them. Everybody thought, when this town got asphaltum pavements that it was the boss, but it isn't—it's some other fellow. The dear old bumpity stone pavements were better than bitumen. The San Francisco purifiers have commenced getting ready to purify, and now you want to watch out.

The first biff at evil was the suppression of the song about golden hair hanging down her back, in the Henderson extravaganza. The next is to take the form of a resiloot against Mose Gunst, the boss bookmaker and wrestler with jackpots; after that the hose.

But where have they got a hole deep enough to deposit the slickens? Where can they find a place to distribute the sweepings from the Augean stables of the dirtiest capital, materially and morally, in all christendom? To what dark dank notsome spot on the face of the earth can they shoo the shameful denizens of Dupont street? To what Plutonian shore can they banish the toughs of the tenderion district, the harples, the beggars, the ex-convicts, the brothel-keepers, and the mystic creatures who float in the dusky hours through the "ladies entrances" of a thousand "joints?"

The purifiers have an army contract on hand, and they will have to work overtime to complete it in this century, and don't you forget it!

The Times crusade for a reform in the hour of commencing plays at our theaters meets with public approval and will be continued until the purpose is accomplished, for the reason that the waste of a half hour or more each evening is an imposition. The fault does not lie wholly with the local managers, although they can probably lay down the law and have it enforced. They should do it, not merely because it is conductive to their patrons' et enforced. They should do it, not merely because it is conductive to their patrons' comfort, but as a business proposition. If people knew they could go to the theater, get out in time to go to a cafe and reach home before midnight, many would attend who now decline to break their necks in rushing for the last car, as they are frequently compelled to do under existing methods. Ten-thirty o'clock is late enough to ring down the curtain, and that should be the hour aimed at, except in cases of extraordinarily elaborate attractions, when there might be fifteen minutes' leeway. Once let it be understood' that performances begin at 8 o'clock and the audiences will do the rest.

The stars have been a-glimmer this week at both the Los Angeles and the Burbank, and good houses have resulted. Sadie Martinot is quite the daintiest, airiest, and most captivating creature seen here for a long time. Ask any ten men in her audience to define what a man's woman is like and hine of the ten will point at the bearturbelowed, volatile and forgetful Mrs. Darcy of "The Passport," and say "there she is." She isn't strong-minded; she doesn't boss, and she doesn't swagger like a man, but she is a being of grace, beauty, fragrance and that peculiar and indefinable charm which the womanly woman carries with her just as a Papa Gontier rose carries its blush and perfume. Her art as a player is no less delightful and engaging than is her winsome and lewitching presence, and hence her vist has been one of the successes of the year.

Jeffreys Logis is quite another type of woman, and as the dominating, intriguing wicked creature La Belle Russe, achieves a striking success. Though the character may be revolting, one knows that it is a type, and he may well observe with what power and intelligence Miss Lewis presents it. The world is full of prey for such female falcons as is the gambler's decoy of Belasco's brilliant play, and one may easily forgive the man who was blinded by her wiles and her beauty. The jerformance at the Burbank was, in a measure, a great one, but there is a better one in prospect tonight.

At the Los Angeles Theater next Monday might, the Tavary Grand English Opera company will commence a week's engagement. The coming of the organization Los Angeles is an event of no little importance to the musical world. Many years have elapsed since grand English opera was last properly interpreted here and since the Tavary company is the only one that will be heard in the United States this season, the event cannot fail to prove notable. The organization has been gotten together with the greatest care. It is composed of the most celebrated American and European singers and forms an ensemble which for magnitude and merit has never been equaled on the English lyrie stage. The season was inaugurated at the New York Park Theater in Brooklyn. Night after night hundreds were turned away unable to procure, standing room. The conservative Brooklyn Eagle which has never before been known to become enthusiastic over any theatrical venture, went into ecstaxies and devoted columns to the new organization. They pronounce it far superior to any grand opera company ever organized in America, and complimented Mme. Tavary as having been the first great artist that could sing in English. The other daily papers were even more generous in their praise.

She is surrounded by a list of artists who have all achieved great reputations in the past. They include such exceptional singers as Nina Bertini-Humphry and Sophie Romani, sopranos; A. L. Guille, Payne Clark, Martin Pache and H. S. Keady, tenors; Helen von Doenhoff and Dora Scott, contraitos; Mme. Thea Dorre, mezzo soprano; William Mertiens, F. L. Hill, and S. Dudley, baritons; William Hamilton, William Schuster and Joseph Witt, bassos. A most noteworthy feature of the Tavary Company is the orchestra, which is composed of grand musicians, and under the efficient direction of Emerico Morrealle of the Italian opera in the City of Marico. In referring to the chorus the Brooklyn Eagle says: The chorister were numerous, about seventy-five years younger and three feet alimmer than the average. They sang better than many well known principals and have never been excelled. Special attention is also called to the scale of prices which will be observed during the Tavary engagement. The repertoire selected for this engagement cannot fall but meet with general approval. It is as follows: Monday, "Rigolette," Tuesday, selected for this engagement cannot fall but meet with general approval. It is as follows: Monday, "Rigoletto;" Tuesday, "Il Trovatore;" Wednesday matinee, "Bohemian Girl;" Wednesday night, "Cavalleria Rusticana, and Il Pagliacci;" Thursday, "Carmen;" Friday, "Faust;" Saturday, matinee, "Martha;" Saturday night, "Tannhauser."

Commencing this evening and for the remainder of the week, Miss Lewis will appear at the Burbank in her greatest part that of Stephanie in "Forget-me-not." Of the 'players appearance in this brilliant creation the San Francisco Call says:
"Miss Jeffreys Lewis could not have selected a play, the title of which would be more appropriate than the one presented to the people of San Francisco last night. They will not soon forget the play nor the great actress. "Forget-me-not is indeed a wonderful piece of passion framing, and although it is not a pleasant thing to look upon and listen to, owing to the fact that the favorite is painted in unbecoming colors from beginning to end, yet, in the hands of such a woman as Miss Lewis, the awdience forgets that Stephanic de Mohrivart is anything but a suffering woman, and in the better feelings of their nature the people are carried away by the sheer force of her magnetic and irresistible powers of art. The real world would look upon Forget-me-not' as a dangerous woman, and this same world in flesh and blood would not allow itself to be placed in a position to even excuse her faults covered up ever so much they might be with the veil of wealth, intelligence and countless other attractions, but as the stage Stephanie, with her beautiful face, her seductive manner, and a voice of inexplicable eweetness and power of thrilling the heart and sensibilities, Jeffrey; Lewis rises to the pinnacle of grandeur, and proves to the world the terrible power of woman for good or evil. She is an actress in whose presence, and under the sound of whose voice the people sit in wonder and fascinated admiration, and who in the most immoral and unpopular role, could force the sympathies of her auditors, leading their hearts hopelessiy in a road they would scorn in actual life to acknowledge. Her art is perfect, and her power is so much above that of most stage women, that she may justly be called the greatest hiving actress."

The Orpheum continues to grow in favor, and tomorrow evening will give an entire change of bill, comprising several moted vaudeville features direct from Europe. The Braatz sisters of the famous family of that name, and whose brothers created such a sensation here lately by their fin de siccle acrobatics, will appear; Mille, Marguerite, in some remarkable feats of oriental juggiery, and Mille, Lizzie, in some interesting methods of centortion, on a high pedestal. Mons. Georgins Dadigo, the Tschar-Kassian marvel, will perform numerous equilibristic feats never surpassed on the vaudeville stage. Ramma and Armo, direct from the Alcazar D'ete, Paris, will give an exhibition of funny and grotesque feats on the horizontal bar. The Rosslyns, said to be two of the best delineators of the humorous side of Hibernian character, will appear in a comic sketch that has set San Francisco wild with merriment. Constantine and Lyons, another clever team, will be on the bill, as will those popular favorites, John and Nellie McCarthy. The Morrellos, with their clever dog, Bob, will continue in their amusing act, and the Lone Star minstrel, George Evans, who has captured the town, will remain for one more week, presenting a list of new and catchy dittles. There will be a matinee this afternoon and a performance tonight, the last two opportunities of seeing Caicedo, Alice Raymond and the funny Big Four. The bill for the coming week gives promise of being the strongest ever presented to lovers of vaudeville in this city.

He may linger as long as he likes in the dining-room, where possibly the table is being laid for a state dinner, in all the grandeur of gold plate, silver candelabra and pink satin table clothes covered with rich lace. If the reporter happens to be a woman, the dress Mrs. Astor is to wasr, spread out in her dressing-room, is submitted to inspection and description. Taking all in all, Mrs. Astor is the divinity of the enterviewers, and entitled to their everlasting gravitude. She even replies to notes—provided the subject relates to social matters. The reporter, however, does not find himself in possession of her autograph, for the note is always written in the third person.

The school or college nowadays that falls to provide a department for physical train-ing is far behind the times. When a dozen or less years ago we had a few mild gym-

The only piece of apparatus of the three hundred or more in use in gymnasiums, invented by a woman, is the musical dumb-bells, which we owe to Miss Le Garde.

She has been honored, and the only woman thus honored by the North American Turner Bund, having been their credited representative at various conventions and congresses, where the subject of physical training was under discussion, notably, the one at Chicago, during the World's Fair.

Miss Le Garde is at the head of the physical training department of the Providence, R. I., public schools, and probably instructs no less than twenty-five thousand children during the year. Miss Le Garde is very fine looking; she is tall, has bright eyes (that nothing escapes.) very dark, brown hair, and rather a round, full face. Her expression animated; she is very enthusiastic and ambitious and a brilliant conversationalist.

There are about three hundred students at Bryn Mawr, and they all go in for physical culture. The Sargent antbropometric charts have been introduced, and at the first meeting in the auturan of the freshman class, each member is given her own "curve" to study, with prescription cards to follow. The students take the Swedish drill at first; this is followed by the more general range. By the generosity of Miss Garrett of Baltimore and the popular subscription of the students, a swimming pool was built last summer at the college, and now every girl is being initiated into the gantle art of swimming in connection with her other athletic exercises.

CLARINDA'S EXPERIENCE.

[From a Special Contributor.]

Clarinda Murgatroyd, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Murgatroyd, lived with her parents on the Rancho del Fuchias Damarado, not quite three miles from Catherita (accent on the i) on the Southern Pacific. Clarinda's soul aspired. The duil routine of home life was to her wearying, and her scornful eye surveyed the infrequent gentlemen visitors to the house with that stern critical look that at once denotes the classic litterateur.

And Clarinda's life crystallized into a supreme effort about the period that our narrative begins—a resolution to write for the press. Mrs. Southey, Harriett Beecher, Stowe, Mrs. Bartlett, and a number of other glorious feminine names arose in her mind, and fame dawned upon her unsuilled by the view of royalties and perquisites that so often accompany it. It was noised throughout Catherita and the borders thereof, that Clarinda was writing, for the press. Rumor, in this case, had some foundation in fact. Clarinda was preparing a long story for the Weekly Defi, a provincial sheet that issued forth at Pomegranate, the county seat, some thirty miles away.

At morn, at night, might Clarinda be seen biting her pen and gazing abstractedly at the distant mountains through a spair of spectacles, which were esteemed, in Catherita, the proper accompaniment for a literary lady. She was as willing to ruin her eyes to be in the style as to go to dinner.

Therefore, when the gums recede from the teeth toward the root, the dentine is left a helpless prey to every acid the mouth contains, and decay begins at the top, cutting off all hope of saving the lower part.

This recession, as I said, is rarely visible except to the dentist. Its probable effect is slight bleeding of the gums whenever a stiff brush is used, while the teeth seemingly remain in their normal condition.

The cause of the irritation is tartar poleon.

The cause of the irritation is tartar poison.

The saliva of the mouth is partly formed of phosphate of lime, which, by chemical action, is converted into tartar. This fastens itself, upon the roots of the teeth and irritates the tender membrane causes a bleeding, sore condition.

In this weakened, porous condition, these innumerable microbes that lurk in the cavities of the mouth, float out from their hidning places and seize upon the wounded line of skin. This is the fatal condition and only the most careful treatment dislodges them. The tartar substance becomes poisonous and the whole eats its way into the gums, which sluff and gradually decrease.

stance becomes poisonous and the whole cats its way into the gums, which sluff and gradually decrease.

Of course, this disease is not common to every mouth. It is caused, primarily, by an acid condition of the saliva, hereditary in some constitutions, and its carliest arresfer is an antiseptic. Should, however, any bleeding occur in brushing, a dentist's help should be called in.

The treatment for it continues from six months to a year, and even then the disease is only arcested, the re-establishment of the gum is never assured.

The nature of the disease is so insidious that grudent women should see to it that the mouth is frequently examined. Any deutist can cell whether a person is inclined to this condition, and at once remove the tartar and advise an antiseptic that destroys the microbes.

In fact, some such preparation should be frequently used to retain a healthy condition of every part of the mouth.

A 2 per cent solution of salicylic acid is especially recommended by the profession.

If the costumed entertainment is in the nature of a rather ceremonious dance, any of the characters of history, romance and legend may serve as models with which to gown it. If you are a lover of the Corsican hero you might take a hint from the Napoleonic resurrection and be a Josephine, a Hortense or a Marie Louise. Again, if you have only frivolous French tastes, and are of that sweet, slim, white type that is most adorable when sudscieus, you might copy Clairin's white Pierretta.

THE PIERRETTE DRESS.

This charming costume, which is a sort of sister to the Pierrot's, is made of white satin and ribbon and thin, white lace. The short, gored skirt is first trimmed with flounces of lace up to the waist; over each of these falls a second one of the satin in, deep points. The bodice of satin is pointed at the waist, and the sleeves which fir tight to the eibow are there finished with a heavy fall of the lace. A bertha of this trims the low round neck, and falls in ends mingled with long loops of the ribbon over the shoulders. Two other bows with flouting ends tie about the sleeves above the lace flounce; the long, white Directoire cane which is carried in the, right hand is also ornamented with a large bow. Add to all this a full ruche of lace that is worn snugly about the bare throat, a pointed clown's cap of white felt, suede gloves, silk stockings and squared-toed shoes with lace pomponettes.

And then, as you stand the thing of beauty whose influence Keats tells us is eternal, thank heaven for your primal loveliness. And don't forget the painter who has so dressed it to perfection.

THE CORRECT CORSET.

How to Accentuate the Graceful Lines of the Figure.

[From a Special Contributor.]

A captious critic said of Calve last winter that he could see nothing admiring about her, unless it was the long line of her bust. Immediately, American beautica began to adopt something else belonging to the great singer besides signettes and a Spanish comb. They tried on corrects whose fulness in, or lack of, lent to the figure that graceful long line from the two tiny muscles in the front of the throat to the point of the bosom.

French women have long known that this situation of the bust makes an exquisite contour of figure. If it was not natural they acquired it, and the result made the French figure, with its broad shoulders, broad, low small bust, and long, slender waist the ideal one for the civilized world.

But it was only a copy from Greek art which Mme. Recamier brought into vogue during the empire. No Venus there had a pigeon breast, nor banded her bosom up to the collar bone, as the American woman too frequently does. The longer the slope, so much more perfect the curve to the line of the waist.

Even French conturieres did not sufficiently impress the American mid with this idea, until the fashionable women across the channel adopted it. Then English corsets were fashfored to suit the need. The bones were either cut sufficiently low for the bust to fall to the correct line, or the fulness across the channel adopted to the these allowed the same position. Take Mrs. Kendall or Mrs. Langtry, for instance the two English figures with which, perhaps, we are most familiar; there one can note the super's slope along the chest; and again, in our own Emma Eames-Story, whose contour is well-nigh perfect, the line is almost phenomenal from chin to bust. Contrast this with Lillian Russell, whose corset binds the fulness over the dress line, no matter how slightly decollete is the bodice.

I went into a corset shop on Fifth avenue yesterday to find if New York women gere adhering to the start they made last spring. "Yes," said the shop-keeper, "it is astonishing how the sale of Empire corrects in town of the advent of the white man these people belleved that the earth was flat, with a cir-cular form, and was suspended in a dark space, and sheltered by the heaven or sky in the shape of a hollow hemisphere. The sun was regarded as the father and the earth the mother of all things that live and grow, but as they had been married a long time, and had become the parents of many generations, they were called the great-grandparents. As far as I can judge, the moon seemed to be their servant; at least, she was required to watch, together with her brothers, the stars, over the sleeping universe, while the sun came down to rest with his family. In the thunder-bird they believed God had a warrior who presided over the most powerful elements—the storm and the fearful cyclona. This symbolic creature is depicted as an impatient and wrathy god of war, at whose appearance even the ever-smilling grandfather, the sun, hides his face. In the realms of water the whale is the symbolized chief of the finny tribes. In every great lake the Sloux imagines a huge fish as ruler of its waters.

THE SIOUX MYTHOLOGY.

Works of the Great Mystery-An Interesting Study. (Popular Science Monthly:) Before the

Yet none of these possess the power of speech. The Great Mystery had shown them some truths denied to man, but he did not trust them fully, therefore he made them dumb. They can only show to man some supernatural things by signs or in dreams, as, for instance, to forctell future events or explain the use of certain powerful remedies. The savage holds that the key of heaven is vested in the visible phenomena of the universe. All creatures, save man, are assigned to a peculiar paradise, in which there is a forbidden fruit, namely, the apple of speech and reasoning. Hence the animals and inanimate things are exempted from sin. Thus it is that rocks, trees and rivers are surrounded with an atmosphere of grandeur, beauty and mystery. Natura is the interpreter of the Great Mystery, and through her man is convinced of fruith. in the shape of a hollow hemisphere. The sun was regarded as the father and the

"I was born, as you know," he said, "at Keinton, near Glastonbury, My biographers, at least some of them, prefer to say I was born at Glastonbury, as if to get a graphic reference to the staff of Arimathea, which, according to tradition, took root there and blossomed at Christmas. I was that unfortunate person, and for a week or rors I was hissed every night. Not for my had acting, (he said this with a pleasant smile,) but out of love for my predecessor. I remember how, every night, I walked to my rooms, some two miles out of town, very wretched, and walked in again the next night no less miserable. To this day I never pass the place by railway without a shudder. I become depressed the moment the familiar little stations close by begin to show themselves. What a delightful thing, by the way of contrast, pleasurable impressions are! But we were talking about the days when I was a child.

TRVING'S MOTHER.

"My mother, lovable, devoted, a woman of first feetings, and whose affections were self-secrificing, was anxious that I should be brought up in the invigorating air of Cornwall, where she was born. Her midden name was Behenna; my father's Brötfribb, as you know. My mother had a sister in Cornwall, who had married a locally famous mining captain, one Penberthy. His name is well known round about St. Ives. He was an adventurous, strong character, Cornish to the backbone. He had worked in Mexico—the mine was the Rel del Monte near Vera Cruz. He earried it to sa high pitch of prosperity, and then went home to Cornwall to marry my aunt and take charge of four extensive Cornish mines. They had two boys and a girl when my mother took me to halestown, where they lived, and left me with my aunt while she joined my father, first in Bristol and then in London. The dining-room might have been a simple Lyceum set, in which the artist has striven to reptint an unostentatious interior with all the picturesqueness of the old days, and all the fuxurious convenience of the new. The dark oak sideboard and over-mantle piece, the soft Turkey carpet, the brans dogs, in the fender, and the white shining glass on the table, are incidents that I recall with the pleasurable memories to which they belong; and outside, every now and then, in the distance, the hay of one of my hone, favorite hounds. We might have been milles away in Irving's favorite Cornwall, for any sound there was to interrupt us. The time was winter, and there was holly mixed up with the picture-frames on the walls, and red berries gittswing in the firelight. It was called "The Grange," and it might have been a picture-gue relie of the time when Ohristmas was universally celebrated with wassail and yulelog, and great feasts, so successfully had the architect transformed a simple cottage, with suggestions of a Georgian history, into the semblance of an ancient manor-house. It had all the characteristics of "the good old day," with modern combinations of art and utility in furniture and decoration. A wing was added to such side of the main and older portion of the original house, outer offices, and a lodge erected, and a new entrance-half construct and furnish "the Grangs." The men grinned, but did not call their dog off. They enjoyed seeing our poor little beast worried. My aunt half walked, half ran, round a little poind that I well remember, and went into a farmer's house, and came out again with a large pair of shears, the kind they use for cutting grass or trimming hedges. what a professedly religious Graphy Dixon, in "Howarths," might have been, the imagination of the future actor must have been greatly influenced in the direction of the weird, hence his first study or recitation was "Uncle Tom," and his two greatest melodramatic performances," The Bells" and "Louis, the Eleventh." I remember him telling me of that same warlock-like Granny Dixon. She was a tyrant to the children, and of the most stern religion, that had brimstone in it and constant threats of hell fire. He and one of his cousins who had suffered her persecution, surprised her one night in a hideous masquerade of horns and tails, and would not quit her until she had prayed that heaven would forgive her all her sins, especially those she had committed against the children.

There were stormy winter night; loving spring days and luselous summer; thick with flowers and the mystery of the sea far away to educate the youthful romancist. Before he went to London; the boy lived for some time with his parents in Bristol, and one of his keenest remembrances of the grand old Western city is connected with a murder that was full of tragic incidents calculated to stimulate his love of the welrd and the gloomy, to be called upon later when he became a man, and poured his soul into the poetic creations of Shakespeare.

IRVING A STUDENT AND A CLERK In London.

From the west of England he was sent to school in London, where he soon learned to love the great mysterious city, and find out its strange holes and corners, its side shows, its cheap theaters and its infinite variety. In those days he indulged in athletic exercises, was an expert awimmer, fond of back streets and slums, as he is now, a proveler in queer places. From the first time that he knew anything about the stage he loved it. Before he left school he had partly mide up his mind to be an actor. When he found himself sitting at a deak to begin life as a clerk, he resolved that nothing should prevent him from going upon the stage; and two worlds, the old and the new,

"Why, yes," said the mining captain, with a genial smile; "I carried my life in my hands there elseven years ago. So rapid were the changes of government in those days, that when we went down in the mine in the morning, we did not know what regime we should be diving under when we came up at night. We had to be very careful how we apoke of men and things until we had found out where we shood, and to whom we owed allegiance."
"We don't change our bill at the Lyceum as often as that," said Irving.
So we passed the afternoon until it was living directing a rehearsal.

Irving put to him in the hall of the club;
"I have been every night to see you. No.
I don't get tired, it is all so wonderful when I think of you at Halestown."
"Our steps lay in very different directions when we started on our carcers."
"Yes, that is so, very odd thing life, eh?"
Irving laid his hand on his cousin's arm as he spoke, "and who would have thought of you trowing up to have such splendid

"Oh, but they are nothing to what you

I left them at the corner of the street, and watched them until they turned into

had been reading all the way down Denver to Pueblo, so was glad of chance to siretch my legs on the idea of his being a desperate character from my mind as an utter absurdity, and, after smoking a cigar with him and the others, while we talked about mines and development syndicates. I hade them a pleasant goodnight and went back with Raymond, joking him on his mistake as we entered our own car. He took my chaffing good naturedly, and suggested that we go into the stateroom at the rear of the train for a cocktail before turning in.

While George—an old overland porter whom we both knew—was getting the materials out of his closet, Paymond turned to me with a grave face and said:

"You've had your laugh; now let's get down to bursness. That man is Burke without question; I knew him at once in spite of his beard. He has a six-shooter in each inside pocket of his ulster, and the man talking with him, who looks like a foreign diplomat, is a Maxican by the name of Bajoda. Being Christmas eve, there happens to be very nearly $200,000 worth of cash and valuables in the WellsFargo safe, and there are two Denver bank men on the train, going through to Sait Lake with, I presume, considerable money. Burke knows he will be shot an sight, if captured, and isn't likely to stop for argument if he meets with unexpected resistance."

"You think his gang are somewhere captured, and isn't likely to stop for argument if he meets with unexpected resistance."

"You think his gang are somewhere along the road, waiting to hold us up?"

"I don't think anything about it—I am positive they are! Unless we can get help between here and Echo, there will be a large amount of money lost even if the train isn't wrecked and some one killed."

"Can't we get help at Canon City?"

"Impossible!" It's but a small place, anyway. If Burke suspects anything, he'll hold a gun against the engineer's head and make him pull out for the gorge; it would take half an hour at least to scrape together a dozen fighting men!"

"Well, but hang it all, are you going to let one had citizen, or possibly two, intimidate a whole train rull of able-bodled men? What's the matter with going in there and arresting the man and his accomplice on suspicion; that is, if you are dead sure you are right?"

"Humph! There's nothing to hinder your trying, if you feel like it. You are heavily armed, of course. I suppose you are a dead shot, also; take the corks out of six champagne bottles the length of the car inside of two seconds, and all that (sarcastically.) Burke is likely, you know, to attempt a thing of this kind with only one accomplice; why, man, there are probably half a dozen, at least. Still, if you've a mind to make the attempt, I'll undertake to convey last wishes to your family after the unpleasantness."

"Well, what do you suggest? What can we do?"

"Blamed if I know! Looks to me as it Burke had the cinch!"

Just thes George brought the cocktails, leaving the door of the closet open behind him, and I soticed a telephone set fitted up on a little shelf inside.

"George, what do you use the 'phone' when at last the train started, wondered anxiously if anything had happened to our relief party. We figured that, running free, the engine would make at least sixty miles an hour, notwithstanding the slight up-grade, and should cover the forty-five miles in as many minutes. Raymond sat smoking a eigar in the rear stateroom, looking as unconcerned as possible, while I stood out in the vestibule, straining my eyes through the darkness, but minute after minute passed and still no sign of 79. Suddeuly we felt the air brakes almost throw the wheels from the track, and in a few seconds the train came to a stop; we knew the engineer must have, seen some obstruction ahead, which would have wrecked us if he had been less watchful. The passengers crowded out to see what the trouble was, but several shots, which broke the glass of the vestibule doors in their faces, sent them back into their sections in short order. Our three red lanterns had been hanging on the rear platform frame for several minutes, and just as two masked men with Winchesters appeared, we saw a tiny red spark rapidly approaching. Half a mirute later, a huge mass rumbled up and a number of dusly figures sprang from it onto the snow-covered bank of the river at our left.

Just then we heard the explosion of a dynamite cartridge up by the express car. This was followed by a rattiling voller. Shouts of surprise and terror schoed through the wintry ait. Then there were several more shots, then a murmur of volces. By that time, we thought it safe to make our way through the train and see how things looked. When we reached the forward sleeper Superintendent Riley met us on the steps. Lying in the broken ice below him were the bodies of four men, one of whom we recognized as our tail stranger with the queer feet. Five others were being handcuffed by their captors and the Sheriff said a few had escaped up the track.

It is needless to say that our share in the affair was magnified out of all proportion, considering that we acted entirely from force of circumsta

"I believe there is a wonderful opportunity for women in the medical profession," answered the doctor. "But they must be true women, practicing for the love of the work. I believe the day of hardship for women in the profession is over. If they are well equipped in their specialties—love the work, and have patience and perseverance, they are bound to succeed. As for the prejudice and opposition against them by male practitioners, that will die out entirely."

Like nearly all women holding public positions requiring advanced thought. Dr. Richardson is a suffragist in theory if not by active enthusiasm.

Dr. Richardson is a strong church woman. Although a weman past forty, she has never married, but lives with an only sister in a handsome house in the fashionable part of Philadelphia. There these two bright women keep house together, the sister attending to all the housekeeping. Dr. Richardson does the man's wyork—the business work of the family, but retains all her natural woman's sympathies, and feminine tenderness of character. Perhaps the bost that can be said of her is that she is, every inch of her, a true woman.

The instructor or director of the gymnastum is more often than not a woman, and a woman moreover, who writes "M. D." after her name. In addition to being D." after her name. In addition to being able to diagnose every ill to which her pupil is entitled by heredity or which she may have developed on her own account, the director must be able to instruct a girl in the art of vaulting, turning back somersault, military drill, swimming, rowing, sprinting, and even football. Verily the instructors in our gymnasiums must be all-around athletes in every sense of the word.

REPRESENTATIVE PROFESSORS.

Take, for example, as representatives, the five young women whose pictures accompany this sketch.

Miss Ellen le Garde is perhaps the best known, as she is not only a very successful instructor of physical culture, but a writer and inventor as well. She has visited every gymnasium of importance in Europe, learning something, so she says, from each one. The only piece of apparatus of the three hundred or more in use in gymnasiums, invented by a woman, is the musical dumb-bells, which we owe to Miss Le Garde.

She has been honored, and the only woman thus honored by the North-American Turner Bund, having been their credited representative at various conventions and congresses, where the subject of physical training was under discussion, notably, the one at Chicago, during the World's Fair.

Miss Le Garde is at the head of the physical training department of the Providence, R. I., public schools, and probably instructs no less than twenty-five thousand children during the year. Miss Le Garde is very fine looking; she is tall, has bright eyes (that nothing escapes,) very dark, brown hair, and rather a round, full face. Her expression animated; she is very enthussatic and ambilious and a brillhant conversationalist.

There are about three hundred students at Bryn Mawr, and they all go to for physical culture. The Sargent anthropometric charts have been introduced, and at the first meeting in the auturn of the freshman class, each member is given her own "curve" to study, with prescription cards to follow. The students take the Swedish drill at first; this is followed by the more general range. By the generosity of Miss Garrett of Baltimore and the popular subscription of the students, a swimming pool was built last summer at the college, and now dvery girl is being initiated into the gentle art of swimming in connection with her other athletic exercises.

In this weakened, porous condition, these innumerable microbes that lurk in the cavities of the mouth, float out from their hiding places and seize upon the wounded line of skin. This is the fatal condition and only the most careful treatment dislodges them. The tartar substance becomes poisonous and the whole cats its way into the gums, which sluff and gradually decrease.

stance becomes poisonous and the whole cats its way into the gums, which sluff and gradually decrease.

Of course, this disease is not common to every mouth. It is caused, primarily, by an acid condition of the saliva, hereditary in some constitutions, and its earliest arrester is an antiseptic. Should, however, any bleeding occur in brushing, a dentist's help should be called in.

The treatment for it continues from six months to a year, and even then the disease is only arrested, the re-establishment of the gum is never assured.

The nature of the disease is so insidious that prudent women should see to it that the mouth is frequently examined. Any dentist can tell whether a person is inclined to this condition, and at once remove the tartar and advise an antiseptic that destroys the microbes.

In fact, some such preparation should be frequently used to retain a healthy condition of every part of the mouth.

A 2 per cent. solution of salicylic acid is especially recommended by the profession.

How to Accentuate the Graceful

From a Special Contributor.]

A captious critic said of Calve last winter that he could see nothing admiring about her, unless it was the long life of her bust. Immediately, American beauties began to adopt something else belonging to the great singer besides significant of the figure that graceful long line from the two tiny muscles in the front of the throat to the point, of the bosom.

French women have long known that this situation of the bust makes an exquisite contour of figure. If it was not natural they acquired it, and the result made the French figure, with it broad shoulders, broad, low small bust, and long, slender waist the ideal one for the civilized world.

But it was only a copy from Greek art which Mme. Recamier brought into vogue during the empire. No Venus there had a pigeon breast, nor banded her bosom up to the collar bone, as the American woman too frequently does. The longer the slope, so much more perfect the curve to the line of the waist.

Even French conturieres did not sufficiently impress the American mind with this idea, until the fashionable women across the channel adopted it. Then English corsets were fashfored to suit the need. The bones were either cut sufficiently low for the bust to fall to the correct line, or the fulness across the chest allowed the same position. Take Mrs. Kendall or Mrs. Langtry, for instance the two English figures with which, perhaps, we are most familiar; there one can note the superb slope along the chest; and again, in our own Emma Eames-Story, whose contour is well-nigh perfect, the line is almost phenomenal from chin to bust. Contrast this with Lillian Russell, whose corest binds the fulness over the dress line, no matter how slightly decollete is the bodice.

I went linto a corset shop on Fifth svenue yesterday to find if New York women were adhering to the start they made last spring. "Yes," said the shop-keeper, "it is astonishing how the sale of Empire corrects is necessarily to a point back send front; "much more comfortable," the speaker to

For women whose fullness reveals through the bodice the exact line where the corset ends, a pointed bust has been fashioned. This effects its end in an admirable manner.

SWHET, BUT COSTLY.

Where expense is not a thing to be considered, a mushroom could be created that might rouse even the donkey on the wall to animation. Peau de sol in a rich white, tinging almost to brown, and pale pink chiffon are the best materials for this.

First, there is a kilted skirt of the chiffon, and over it a panier drapery of the peau de sole rounded well out over each hip to counterfeit mushrooms.

The round bodice of peau de sole is held over the shoulders by straps; some inches below, on the arm, hang precariously the short, plump mushroom sleeves.

The slippers and stockings which are to imitate the stem of the plant, are in the brown white of the silk. The sued gloves must be of the same shade, and a mushroom hat with a pink, sherried chiffen lining, can be made by gathering at the edge a large circle of the peau de sole over a wire ring that has first been covered loosely with white cotton batting.

I have made notes to a blies of reminiscences of the famous actor. I shall probably never write either the one or the other. When I had that prospective volume more in my mind than usual, Irving talked with me about his birthplace.

"I was born, as you know," he said, "at Keinton, near Glastonbury, My biographers, at least some of them, prefer to say I was born at Glastonbury, as if to get a graphic reference to the staff of Arimathes, which, according to tradition, took root there and blossomed at Christmas. I was that unfortunate person, and for a week or r'ore I was hissed every night. Not for my bad acting, (he said this with a pleasant smile,) but out of love for my predecessor. I remember how, every night, I walked to my rooms, some two miles out of town, very wretched, and walked in again the next night no less miserable. To this day I never pass the place by railway without a shudder. I become depressed the moment the familiar little stations close by begin to show themselves. At first I was miserable enough, parted with my mother, as if my heart were breaking, but did not show half I felt, nor she; but it was the right thing. At the time I speak of Capt. I remember that, with the other children, I used to go and meet my uncle at the mine. He would be underground one week, and the next week above. Two men at the top of this bank had with them a sort of mongret buil terrier, an ugly, viclous-looking brute; the men began to ast their dog on ours. My sunt remonstrated. They only laughed and urged on their brute. It came lunghing down the bank, half crawling down, toward our dog, and ther saddenly pounced upon it, and gripped it by the back of the neck. The men grinned, but did not call their dog off. They enjoyed seeing our poor. little beast worried. My aunt half walked, half rap, round a little pond that I well remember, and went into a farmer's house, and came out again with a large pair of shears, the kind they use for cutting gruss or trimming hedges. She went up to the two dogs, and thrust the shears straight into the buil-terrier, which almost the next moment released our dog and rolled over dead. A CHILDHOOD TO FOSTER IMAGINATION.

Educated among the rugged scenes of a mining district, brought up in a family of a strong individuality, with such an aunt and unche as we have seen, not to mention a fanatical relative not unlike what a professedly religious Granny Dixon, in "Howarths," might have been, the imagination of the future actor must have been greatly influenced in the direction of the weird, hence his first study tion of the weird, hence his first study. the imagination of the future actor must have been greatly influenced in the direction of the weird, hence his first study or recitation was "Uncle Tom," and his two greatest melodramatic performances," The Belis" and "Louis, the Eleventh." I remember him telling me of that same warlock-like Granny Dixon. She was a tyrant to the children, and of the most stern religion, that had brimstone in it and constant threats of hell fire. He and one of his cousins who had suffered her persecution, surprised her one night in a hideous masquerade of horns and tails, and would not quit her until she had prayed that heaven would forgive her all her sins, especially those she had committed against the children.

There were stormy winter night, leving spring days and lusclous summer, thick with flowers and the mystery of the sea far away to educate the youthfur romancist. Before he went to London the boy lived for some time with his parents in Bristol, and one of his keenest remembrances of the grand old Westers city is connected with a murder that was full of tragic incidents calculated to stimulate his love of the world and the gloomy, to be called upon later when he became a man, and poured his soul into the poetic creations of Shakespeare.

IRVING A STUDENT AND A CLERK IN LONDON.

From the west of England he was sent to school in London, where he soon learned to love the great mysterious city, and find out its strange holes and corners, its side abows, its cheap theaters and its infinite variety. In those days he indulged in afhietic exercises, was an expert swimmer, fond of back streets and slums, as he is now, a prowher in queer places. From the first time that he knew anything about the stage he loved it.
Before he left school he had partly made up his mind to be an actor. When he found himself sitting at a desk to begin life as a clerk, he resolved that nothing should prevent him from going upon the stage; and two worlds, the old and the new, are glad that he had the courage of his ambition.

It will be interesting to mention that in the autumn of 1883, Irving asked me to lunch at the Garrick to meet an old friend of his. He introduced me to a tail, wellbuilt man with the manner and appearance of a traveler. He had lightest heir, his complexion was rather florid, and he wore a beard and moustache and imperial of "goatee" something after the American Tashion.

"This is my cousin, Capt. Pemberthy," and Irving, "You will remember me tellsico is even a wilder country than Comwalt?" Irving remarked interrogatively.

"Why, yes," said the mining captain, with a genial smile; "I carried my life in my hands there elseven years ago. So rapid were the changes of government in those days, that when we want down in the mine in the morning, we did not know what regime we should be diving under when we came up at night. We had to be very careful how we apoke of men and things until we had found out where we steod, and to whom we owed allegiance."

"We don't change our bill at the Lyceum as often as that," said Irving.

So we passed the afternoon until it was living directing a rehearsal.

Irving put to him in the half of the club; "I have been every night to see you. No, I don't get tired, it is all so wonderful when I think of you at Halestown."

"Our steps lay in very different directions when we started on our careers."

"Yes, that is so, very odd thing life, ch?"

"Irving laid his hand on his cousin's arm as he spoke, "and who would have thought of you growing up to have such splendid etwintures, ch?"

"Oh, but they are nothing to what you have done," said Penberthy.

I left them at the corner of the street, and watched them until they turned into Covent Garden, the two tall fellows who had played together as children along the Cornish hills, to part as lads each on such strangely different paths, and to meet again where everybody meets everybody ease, acoper or later, in the world's me-tropolis.

"Unless something happens to prevent." The words of Montetth Sterry were uttered Jestingly, but they caused a pang to the affectionate parent, as she asked:
"What could happen, Montetth?"
Fred took upon himself to reply promptly:

"It will bear a locomotive; I never saw it finer; the winter has not been so severe as some we have known, but it has got there all the same; Maine can furnish the Union with all the ice she will want next summer."

"There may be airholes."
"None that we cannot see; they are few

Here Sterry spoke with mock gravity.

"And why?" depnanded the shocked mother.
"I would like a race with them; wouldn't it be fun?"
"Yes," replied Sterry, "provided we could outskate them."
"I never knew that wild animals skate."
"They can travel fast when they take it into their heads to turn hunter. I suppose many of the bears are hibernating, but the wolves—if there are any waiting for us—will be wide awake and may give us the roughest kind of sport."

creek debouched into the stream, in its search for the ocean, the great depository of most of the rivers of the globe.

The trees, denuded of vegetation, projected their bare limbs into the crystalline air, and here and there where they leaned over the banks, were thrown in relief against the moonlit sky beyond. The moon itself was nearly in the zenith and the reflected gleam from the glassy surface made the light almost like that of day. Along the shore, however, the shadows were so gloomy and threatening that Montelth Sterry, more than once, gave a slight shudder and reached his mittened hand down to his side to make sure his weapon was in place.

The course was sinuous from the beginning, winding in and out so continuously that the length of the stream must have been double that of a straight line extending over the same course. Some of these turnings were abrupt, and there were long, sweeping curves with a view extending several hundred yards.

They were spinning around one of these when Sterry uttered an exchamation:

"I'm disappoined!"

"Why?" inquired Jennie, at his elbow.

"I had just wrought myself up to the fancy that we were ploneers, the first people of our race to enter this primeval wilderness, when lo."

He extended his arm up stream and to the right, where a star-like twinkle showed that a dwelling stood, or some parties had kindled a camp fire.

"Quance; an old fisherman and hunter, lives there," explained Fred. "As, I believe he has done for fifty years."

"Would you like to make a call on him?" asked Jennie.

"I have no desire to do sat Lenjoy this spot better than to sit by the fire and listen to the most cutertaining hunter. Isn't that he?"

The cabin was several rode from the shore, the space in front being clear of trees and affording an unobstructed view of the little dog structure, with its single door and window in front and the stone chimney from which the smoke was emerging. Half way between the cabin and the stream, and in the path connecting the two, stood a man with folded arms looking at them. He was so motionless that he suggested a stump, but the bright moenlight left no doubt of the litenity.

"'Hallos, Quance!" shouted Fred, slightly slackening his speed and curving toward the shore.

The old man made no reply. Then Jennie's musical voice rang out on the frosty air, but still the hunter gave no sign that he knew he had been addressed. He did not move an arm nor stir.

"I wonder whether he hasn't frozen stiff in that position," remarked Sterry. "He may have been caught in the first snap several weeks ago and has been acting ever since as his own monument."

At the moment of shooting out of sight around the curve the three glanced back. The cld fellow was there, just as they saw him at first. They even fancied he had not so much as turned his head, while they were passing, but was still gazing at the bank opposite him, or what was more likely, peering sideways, without shifting his head to any extent.

The occurrence, however, was too slight to cause a second thought.

They were now fairly under way as may be said, being more than a mile from their starting point. They were proceeding swiftly, but easily, ready to decrease, or increase their speed at a moment's notice. Sometimes they were nigh enough to touch each other's hands and again they separated, one going far to the right, the other to the left, while the third kept near the middle of the stream. Then two would swerve toward shore, or perhaps it was all three, and again it was Jennie who kept the farthest from land, or perhaps it was all three, and again it was Jennie who kept the farthest from land, or perhaps it was all three, and again it was Jennie who kept the farthest fro some of the overhanging limbs brushed her face.

"Look out; there's an air hole!" called the brother, at the moment the three reunited after one of these excursions.

"What of it?" was her saucy demand, and instead of shooting to the right or left, she kept straight on toward the open space.

"Don't try to jump it!" cautioned Sterry, suspecting her purpose: "it's too wide."

"No doubt it is for you."

The daring words were on ner fips, when she rose lightly in the air and skimmed as gracefully as a bird across the space of clear water. She came down, seemingly without jar, with the bright blades of steel ringing over the crystal surface, and without having fallen a foot to the rear of her companions.

"That was foolish," said her brother reprovingly; "suppose the ice had given away when you struck it again?"

"What's the use of supposing what could not take place?"

"The air hole might have been wider than you suppose."

not take place?"
"The air hole might, have been wider than you suppose."
"How could that be when it was in plain sight? If it had been wider, why I would have jumped further, or turned aside like my two gallant escorts. Stick to me and I'll take care of you."

There was no dashing the spirits of the girl and Sterry broke into laughter, wondering how it would be with her if actual danger did present itself.

Occasionally the happy ones broke into snatches of song and indulged in fancy skating, gliding around each other in bewildering and graceful curves. The three were experts, as are nearly all people in that section of the Union. Anyone watching their exhibitions of skill and knowing the solicitude of the mother at home would have wondered why she should feel any misgiving concerning them.

True there were wild animals in the his loaded revolver in the outer pocket of his heavy coat, just before starting, and when no one was watching him.

Frecisely at 8 o'clock, the three friends, warmly and conveniently clad, with their keen-edged skates securely fastened, glided gracefully up stream, the mother standing on the porch of her home and watching the figures as they vanished in the moonlight. She was smiling, but in her heart was a misgiving, such as she had not feit before, when her children were starting off for an evening's enjoyment. The minute they were beyond sight she sighed, and, turning about, resumed her seat, by the table in the center of the sitting-room, where, as the lamplight fell upon her pale face, she strove to drive away the disquieting thoughts that would not leave her.

It was a pleasing sight as the three young people, the picture of life, health and joyous spirits, side by side, laughing, jesting and with never a thought of danger, moved out to the middle of the river and then sped toward its source, with the easy, beautiful movement which in the accomplished skater is the ideal of grace. The motion seemingly was attended with no effort and could be maintained for hours with little fatigue.

The small river, to which allusion has been made, was 100 yards in width at the point where they passed out upon its surface. This width naturally decreased as they ascended, but the decrease was sogradual that at Wolf Glon, fitteen miles away, the breadth was fully three-fourths as much as opposite the Whitney home. Occasionally, too, the channel widened to maye wondered why she should reel any misgiving concerning them.

True, there were wild animals in the forests; and at this season of the year, when pressed for hunger, they would eagerly attack persons if opportunity presented, but could the fleetest outspeed any one of those three, if she or she chose to put forth the utmost strength and skill possessed?

put forth the utmost strength and skill possessed?

"Look!"
It was Jennie who uttered the exclamation, and there was good cause for it. She was slightly in advance, and was rounding another of the turns of the stream, when she caught sight of a huge black bear, who, instead of staying in some hollow tree or cave, sucking his paw the winter through, was lumbering over the ice in the same direction with themselves.

He was near the middle of the frozen current, so that it was prudent for them to turn to the right or left, and was proceeding at an easy pace, as though he was out for a midnight stroll, while he thought over matters. Though one of the stupidest of animals he was quick to hear the noise behind him, and looked back to learn what it meant.

PIRATE TREASURE.

BLACKBEARD AND THE UNRE-COVERED TREASURE.

By Howard Pyle.

[From a Special Contributer.]

There are two pirates, each of whom are very famous in this country Capt. William Kidd, of whose adventures and the treasure buried upon Gardener's Island it has already been told, and Capt. "Black-band."

it has already been told, and Capt. "Black-beard."

Perhaps Capt. Kidd is the more famous of the two, but nevertheless nearly everyone knew of Blackbeard, and there is hardly a strip of saidy beach between New Jersey and Florida that is not reputed to hold somewhere hidden in its bosom the buried treasure that he jest being him, and which has never yet/bech recovered.

Nowhere in all the history of piracy is there such a terrible, strange, dreadful figure as that of Capt. Edward Teach, or Blackbeard. Listen how the old historian of the pirates describes him. "Our hero,

And so they were forced to let the villalian pass with impunity.

"The government was not long in deliberating upon the message, though it was the greatest afroat that could be put upon them, yet for the saving of so many people's lives (among them Samuel Wrags, one of the council) they compiled with the necessity and sent aboard a chest valued at between between £300 and £400, and the pirates went back to their ships."

How much Blackbeard took from the weesels he stopped on the bar in front of Churleston Harbor; how great was the morey paid for the redemption of the prisoners, no one can tell. Altegether the booty which he gained must have been very great indeed.

Adding what was here taken to what he altready had, he must have smassed a considerable fortune by this time. This fortune he determined to secure as much as possible to himself. Accordingly he managed in a very dever way to run ell of his vessels aground off Tepsail inlet excepting one. To that one—a small sloop—le had transferred all of his treasure and a cless of forty men, and with it he sailed dway for the North Carolina Sounds.

But even forty were, in Blackbeard's opinion, too many to share what had been gained in their piracles. Accordingly he marrooned mineteen of them on a little sandy island, about a league from the main land. "where," says the historian, "there Blackbeard abandons nineteen of his crew on a desert island.

Capt. Teach," says he, "assumed the cognomen of Blackbeard, from that large quantity of hair, which, like a frightful meteor, covered his whole face and fright-ened America more than any comet that had appeared for a long time.

"This beard was black, which he suffered to grow to an extravagant length; as to the breadth, it came up to his eyes. He was accustomed to twist it with ribbons into small tails, after the manner of our Ramidies. Wigs, and to turn them about his ears. In times of action he wore a sling over his shoulder, with three brace of pistols hanging in the hoisters, like bandaliers. He stuck lighted matches under his hat, which, appearing on each side of his face and eyes, looked matches under his hat, which, appearing on each side of his face and eyes, looked ma. Jurilly ferce and wild, made him altogether such a figure that, imagination cannot form an idea of a fury from the pit to look more frightful."

Perhaps not one of those old pirates, unless it was Capt. Kidd, was so closely identified with our early colonial history as Blackbeard. All of his depredations were committed along our coasts, where his terrible figure would be seen, now swooping down upon some peaceful merchant coaster, now running ashore to devastate some plantation or settlement; now appearing in some seaport town to barter or trade with the merchants or planters with the goods that had just been taken from some sloop or schooner off the shore.

It would be impossible here to recount all of his bold and desperate adventures along our American seaboard.

That which shall be told is how he terrorised and robbed the town of Charleston, along our American seanoard.

That which shall be told is how he terrorized and robbed the town of Charleston, in South Carolina. How he and Gov. Edeu of North Carolina shared the spoils of the freightage of sugar; how he fought his last fight, and how he left behind him a same dust may hever yet been unearthed.

Capt. Edward Teach began his pirate life about the year 1716, salling from the Island of Providence in the West Indies with a 'Capt. Hornigold (another notable pirate) to the main of America, taking in the course of a month, among other prizes, a large French and richly-freighted Guineaman bound to Martinique.

lantic Coast in the two or three years that followed.

It is not proposed here to tell of the adventures that happened to him in all of that time; of how he captured vessel after vessel; of how he fought a famous battle with the man-of-war Scarborough, beating off the King's ship after an engagement that lasted for several hours. It is only needful to say that he joined with him anumber of other pirate crafts then sailing under Maj. Stede Bonnet, and with this fleet fairly swept the sea, sailing away northward until he finally suddenly appeared off the bar of Charleston, S.C.

It was a bright, warm day in the early springsime. That morning the bid ship, the Royal Princess, Capt. Robert Clark commander, had set sail from Charlestown Harbor for England with a number of pessengers of consideration aboard her. Late in the afternoon a little boat came rowing up to Charleston with the news that the pirates had captured the Royal Princess just off the bay and were holding her as a prize.

Blackbeard had come.

pirates had captured the Royal Frincess prize.

Blackbeard had come.

For a whole week the pirates tay off the town. The Royal Frincess was only the first of their captures. Every incoming and outgoing craft was stopped until a score of vessels lay riding at anchor off the bar under the guns of the pirate fleet, and the town was completely blockaded. Every prize was overhauled and everything of value taken from it. The passengers themselves were held for ransom and all their money, and even their watches and their jewelry were taken from them.

At last the town itself was visited. One day a boat-load of pirates with one of their prisoners landed at the quay, where a fittle crowd had gathered, watching them loweringly.

It is thus that the old historian of those times tells it:

"Being in want of modicine." says he

It is thus that the old historian of those times tells it:

"Being in want of medicine," says he, "Blackbeard resolved to demand a chest from the government of the province. Accordingly, Richards, the captain of the Revenge-sloop, with two or three more pirates, were sent up along with Mr. Marks, one of the prisoners whom they, had taken in Clark's ship to make their demands, which they did in a very insolent manner, threatening that if the town did not immediately send the chest of medicine and let the pirate-ambassadors return without offering any violence to their persons, they would murder all the prisoners and send their heads up to the governor and set the ships they had taken on fire.

"While Mr. Marks was making application to the council, Richards and the rest of the pirates walked the streets, publicly in the sight of all people, who were fired with the utmost indignation, but durst not so much as think of arresting them.

was neither bird, beast, fish nor herb for their sustenance." And only twenty-three were left to share the treasure.

At that time piracy had become so rambant that King George issued a proclamation pardoning all freebooters who would surrender by a certain date, hoping thus to correct the evil. Blackbeard and the twenty-three pirates who now were with him were almost the first to take advantage of this pardon. After having shared the treasure among themselves, they went up into Pamlico Sound and there surendered to Gov. Eden at Rath Town.

There Blackbeard bought a plantation, married a girl of 16 years old (his fourteenth wife, it, is said) and striking up a friendship with the Governor, the colomial secretary and other d goitaries of the province, led for a while a merry, joily life of it, spending his money like a lord. So for a while he continued his life eshore. Then, suddenly and apparently without reason, his restless desire for adventure broke out afresh. He called together his men who had nearly all settled in the neighborhood of Bath Town; manned the sloop that he had brought with him, and with it and another sailed away out into the ocean through Ocracock.

He was gone for six or seven weeks, and then he returned, bringing in a large French barque, freighted with a precious cargo of sugar, which was then worth considerably upward of a shilling a pound.

No one ever heard the history of the French vessel—how it was taken—it must bave been a dark and bloody story. Blackbeard said he found the barque adrift, with neither captain nor crew, and that he had brought it into port as a derelict. He made Gov. Eden a present of fifty hogsheads for the sugar, and Mr. Knight, the colonial secretary, a gift of twenty hogsheads. The rest was divided among the pirates.

Then Gov. Eden promptly ordered the now empty vessel to be towed out into the sound and burned. There it was consumed, bissing, to the water's edge and sunk, and with it the last fragment that might have led to detection was blotted out forever. It was a very profitable adventure.

And now comes the flerce and bloody ending of Blackbeard's story.

Gov. Spottewood of Virginia was already beginning to take steps to stamp out Blackbeard's nest of pirates down at Bath Town, even though it was not in his jurisdiction, and was in the jurisdiction of another governor. The story that presently reached his ears concerning the loss of the French barque determined him to act without losing any time.

He fitted out two sloops, under command of Robert Maynard, first lieutenant of the Pearl man-of-war, which was then lying at the mouth of the James River. Lieut. Maynard sailed down to Ocrocoke Inlet, into the sound, and there met Blackbeard. Then followed a fight such as one may read about now and then in pirate books, but rarely in a true history such as this. Blackbeard opened the battle by firing two broadsides into the lieutenant's sloop, under the smook of which he and the King's men drifted closer together and mally grappled. As soon as they were near enough, the pirates began to throw aboard the sloop grenades, made of case bottles, filled with small shot and pieces of iron. These grenades burst as sobn as they had atruck the deck, throwing their contents, together with bits of broken

It is thus that Capt. Johnson, one of the chroniclers of those events, describes the conflict:

"Blackbeard and the lieutenant." says he, "fired the first pistol at each other, by which the pirate received a wound, then they engaged with swords until the lieutenant's unluckiff broke, who, thereupon stepped back to cock His pistol; Black-'- with his culesa was striking at that instant, when one of Maynard's men gave him a terrible wound in the neak and throat, by which the lieutenant came on with a small cut on his fingers.

"They were now closely and warmly engaged, the lieutenant and twelve men against Blackbeard and fourteen, until the sea was tinctured with blood around the vessel. Though Blackbeard received a shot from he pistol that Lieut Maynard discharged, yet he stood his ground and fought with great fury until he received twenty cuts and five more shots. At length, as he was cocking a pistol, having fired several before, he fell down dead."

Maynard cut off the dead pirate's head, nailed it at the bowsprit of his sloop and then sailed back in triumph to Virginia. So ended Blackbeard, the pirate, fighting to, the last.

But what became of his treasure? Some-

So ended Blackbeard, the pirate, fighting to the last.

But what became of his treasure? Somewhere he had hidden it in the marshes or bluffs of Currituck Sound or in the forests of the Tar River. There it somewhere reposes to this day—all that had been carned through blood and crime and wickedness buried in the ground and lost forever.

"The night before Blackbeard was killed," says one of his historians, "one of the men asked him in case anything appened to him in the coming engagement whether his wife knew where he had buried his mioney? He answered that no-body but himself and the devil knew where it was, and that the longest liver should take all!"

A BOY TO THE RESCUE.

By Oliver O. Howard, Maj.-Gen. U. S. Army, (Retired.)

Bedloe's Island is situated westward across the channel from Governor's Island. This channel is a roadway in New York Harbor, through which four-fifths of the large steamers pass and repass on their way to and from the ocean.

Bedloe's Island has but a few acres of land, not more than twenty or thirty in all. On its eastern front stands the great Statue of Liberty, which France, in moble generosity, presented to our country. On the western front of the island is a small marine station, where there are a few finhabitants and a hospital, directly or indirectly connected with the lighthouse department.

For, as every New Yorker can testify, the Goddesa of Liberty, who constitutes the principal part of the statue, holds a torch terminated by a brilliant light in her elevated right hand. By some contrivances, bright electric lights are thrown upon the pedestal of the statue in such a oway as to produce marked effects that were not intended. At night the whole structure gives the appearance of a queen, crowned and ornamented, with extended skirts of dazzling brightness.

On the north side of the little island, until recently, there has been a small garison of troops. This garrison did not generally exceed fifty men. The last detail sent there by the government was a company of the Sixth Infantry, U.S.A., commended by Grant A M Wathar!!

At the time of which I am writing Capt. Wether!! had with him two or three lieutenants, among whom was Lieut. Frank D. Webster. The special duty of this command was to guard the statue against any or all persons who might be disposed to deface or otherwise injure it, and to preserve order, as a special police might do among the inhabitants and numerous visitors who are constantly coming and going.

Toward sunset on the 18th of January, 1882, the several officers and many of the men belonging to this garrison, which is designated in army orders as Fort Word, were skating on the ice, which, in an unusual freeze-up, had formed so as to cover the whole stretch of deep water from Bedloe's Island to the New Jersey shore.

As twilight was approaching the officers, excepting Lieut. Webster, and the men who were on the lee, took off their skates and went back to the island. For just then they heard the first call for retreat, the final roll-call of the day. Webster lingered, probably to look after Max Wetherill (a boy of about 14 years, the son of Capt. Wethe man was going toward the woman, having accomplished the object, a very natural one, that is to say, to be able to tell his friends that he had walked on ice all the way from Bedloe's Island to the National Docks.

one, that is to say, to be able to tell his friends that he had walked on lee all the way from Bedloe's Island to the National Docks.

This worthy citizen, an engineer in the lighthouse department at Bedloe's Island, Charles Miller, had been but a short time married, and the woman seen upon the lee was bis good wife. How could they better celebrate the termination of their honeymoon than by faking a charming, almost apiraculous, sereing walk upon the water? But, however praiseworthy and precious the original purpose, the immediate consequences were not propitious. For, as on his returning steps, his venturesome wife draw near to meet him, he was filled with alarm and horror to behold her sinking through the treacherous ice.

He instantly flew to her assistance, for he thought only of her extreme peril. But, as soon as his feet touched the plate of ice, already cracking in spangles, he also broke through and, like his wife, sank to his chin.

Now, chilled by the plunge, both of them were throwing forward their arms, and by their desperate struggles causing the adges of the broken ice to crumble before them.

The tide current was at this time swift and incisive and every spring Mr. Miller made to throw himself upon the surface, erushed out and drove away cakes newly severed from the mass.

All that they really effected for their own relief was done by keeping their heads above the black waters and calling loudly for help.

Webster and Max Wetherill, when this double catastrophe was taking place, were some three bundred yards off, still skating.

The lad Max, probably hearing the alarming cries, was the first to catch sight of this imperilled couple, but dimly seen in the evening haze.

He shouted to the lieutenant, and both started, swiftly skating to the resoue. Webster, being stronger and an expert, arrived first at the place of disaster. Knowing the danger of approaching too closely the edge of the crackling ice, the young lieutenant wisely threw his overcoat to the engineer, cheering and encouraging him by vo

Miller was saved.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—(From Our Reg-lar Correspondent.) What a deal of dif-sence it makes as to the glasses we ear when we look at the world and the ople therein. To see it as it really is, see the faults and virtues, the kindness d sweetness of the men and women who mpose it, we need to look at it, not any people behave as if they always green glasses that show hatred, malice and all uncharitableness rough them. Then, again, because there sunshine in one's own life, one is conceed that all the world is just as it was, and that unhappy or troubled people of one exist. This extreme is almost bad as the other, and what you and want, my friend, are the clear glasses

I want, my friend, are the clear glasses that do not exaggerate in any way. We want to see life, people, books, pictures and peautiful belongings as they are to look the truth straight in the face, and to know that it is mighty and does provail.

HER HEARTI WITH THE POOR.

The average man and woman is inclined to think that she of whom they read as being gay, rich and beautiful, does not trouble herself either about the sorrows of the world, or how to relieve them. That is one mistake. The fashionable woman is really a busy one, but she manages to have her pet charity, to work faithfully for it, give to it plentifully, and sometimes, she forces her friends to do likewise. A slily idea, the result of foolish stories, that idealizes the poor and insists that hearts do not best under silk or satin, as they do under cotton or wool, exists. The best contradiction is to see the rich women in the hospitals, not only at holiday wime, but all the year round. To see these women contradiction is to see the rich women in the more corrying jellies and delicacies to the tonement houses, and entertaining gracefully and graciously (as does Mrs. Fred Vanderbilt) party after party of working girs, members of the clue to which she belongs, is an emphatic denial in itself.

Aliways PREFITY FROCKS.

In the hospitals and down among the tenemest houses it is preferred that the rich woman comes well dressed. Those women on the other, side like to, see the pretty gowns, and feel that, if they are worth visiting at all, they are worth dressing fer. I shall never forget the expression on a sick child's face after he has had standing by his cot a charmingly pretty girl, all feathers and ribbons, laces and furbelows; as see laid the bunches of holly berries on his bed, he smoothed the silk of her gown caressingly and said: "I like you, you always look as if you had walked out of the fairy book." I tell you, my friend, the charities of the fashionable woman are many, and if she were to give them up, the people on the other side would realize exactly what they had meant, and all that she had been to them.

A QUESTION OF MANNERS.

A QUESTION OF MANNERS. ing through the glass with great are, I think as a nation, we may be set town as at once the most chivalrous and he worst-mannered in the world. Too nuch independence of constitution has nade too much independence of manner, and there is a slight inclination to respect and there is a signt inclination to respect melither weakness nor old age. A party of fashionable women go to the opera, and talk through an entire scene—make every-body else uncomfortable, and then, when some man, a real music lover, who can only afford the opera once in a while, feels that he is being defrauded of his rights and ventures to hiss the chattering contingent, he is quoted as a bore. Now, that is all wrong. The women who talk deserve to be hissed, and each one of them ought to go home with her cheeks burning with shame, and think out, in the quietness of her own room, as to what constitutes real politeness.

WHERE HAS COURTESY GONE? WHERE HAS COURTESY GONE?
We women, who crowd the street cars that are already full, and look steadfastly and rudely at the man who does not rise and offer his seat, are very guilty. We go into a restaurant, where the tables are siready crowded, select the one we would tike to have, and wonder audibly, and, occasionally, loudly, "why those people don't hurry up." We talk a great deal about respecting the rights of the nation, and we haven't the slightest particle of consideration for the individual. Impoliteness exists in every class of society, and is the one vice which the rich and poor share silke.

one vice which the rich and poor share alike.

Our young girls are in such a hurry to have a good time that they forget the deference due their mothers. Our sons are in such a hurry to make money that they disregard the advice and ignore the experience of the father, whom each one is inclined to call "the old man." Our servants, treated rudely and without consideration, are impertinent, and are only a proof that the servant is reflecting the mistress as in a looking glass. Do you think that I am looking at things darkly? No! Think it all over yourself, and you will see that as a nation we are about as bad-mannered as we can be, and that we will only attain positeness when each individual considers it a personal duty to be courteous to each and every one in every grade of Mfc.

GENUINE AND IMITATION.

GENUINE AND IMITATION.

It is funny how people write and talk about the "swell set" in New York, the "sweager set" and the "literary set." The best set is that one never heard of. It does not bisson forth its riches, but enjoys them in comfort. It is of blue blood and white reputation. Its daughters are not advertised in the daily papers as professional beauties, and its sons are not conspicuous among the horsey or fast sets. Charity and kindness are found among it. The men are honest and the women are above-reproach. The set you read about is governed by the stock market; is rich today and making a great display. It is possible that its downfall may be chronicled tomorrow, and it is certain that it will be forgotten the day after. The so-called literary set has little to recommend it save that those who compose it mistake notoriety for fame. They talk about subjects they do not undersfand, and they display, in a custous manner, how a well-advertised pill is swallowed without a question as to its circuity value. GENUINE AND IMITATION.

HOW TO GET IN.

To get in the much-advertised set, the so-called swell one, requires very little. Simply the spending of plenty of money, a skin somewhat thek and a tongue somewhat acrid. In the literary set, men are so scarce that they are accepted, no matter how, or through whom they come. You, who are from some small town, wish that you could see all this galety, and regret that you are not in society. Really you can afford to laugh, for no one set makes society. Society proper is really the gathering together of two or three, five or six, twenty-five or a hundred, as many as you will, who find much in life about which they agree, and who like to come together to exchange a pleasant word, pass a pleasant hour and realize what constitutes pleasure. The other is the basest imitation—it isn't even good acting, and the people in it cannot believe that the gingerbread is improved by the gilt on it, that it is worth offering to any one but the fool who langles his cap and bells as if he were proud of his folly.

THE EVOLATION OF A BEAUTY.

"But," said pretty Miss Primrose, "the newspapers say that the great beauty, Miss Base Metal, was in one of the boxes at the opera wonderfully dressed, and oh, how I should like to be a beauty!" Now, Miss Primrose herself, has a sweet, soft skin, clear gray eyes, while her brown hair is drawn back in a great knot, from which little tendrils will escape and curl about her neck. I take up the spectacles of truth, and I look at Miss Primrose, and I say: "My dear, the young lady you talk about is not a beauty, except by report. The newspapers must have something to write about, and when this girl appared, as she was ordinarily good looking, and had

BOTH CHICK AND CHEEK,

She called herself a beauty, forced her-

BOTH CHICK AND CHEEK,
She called herself a beauty, forced herself on the notice of the world, insisted upon her perfections, until people who had never thought of her at all, acceptedher own account of her loveliness, and so the name has stuck to her. She has the fair complexion of a Swede, hair and eyes to correspond, and an absolutely expressionless face. Her reputation is like that of a successful patent medicine—the result of good advertising. The handsomest women in America come from the smaller cities, and if New York wanted a beauty show it would have to draw its best cards from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Richmond, New Orleans, St. Louis and San Francisco, not to mention Chicago and Louisville."

Little Miss Primrose is satisfied, and is wonderling now about a certain fashionable marriage, and what the woman married the man for. I can't explain it.

"WETLL MERRILY MARRY." BOTH CHICK AND CHEEK,

"WE'LL MERRILY MARRY."

WOMEN WORTH MARRYING.

The others are of little worth and never would be missed if they dropped out of the matrimonial handicap. That sounds a little racy, but it is what it is called sometimes. Marriage is too often handicapped by lack of love, lack of sympathy. You want your boy to get the exceptional woman, and so do I, for what man is, is what the woman he loves makes him. Women rule everything. Really the court, the camp, the grove. And just as really, all men below and saints above. What is your special kingdom? It ought to be a comfortable home. And who is your special slave? It ought to be a loving man. If it isn't, I am sorry for you. If it is so, I congratulate you. Congratulate you most sincerely, and when that is said by the lips, it comes from the heart of BAB.

How to Wash a Carriage.

Provide two large, soft sponges and chamois. Never wash a carriage in the sun.

Remove the rugs and cushions, dust out the inside of top and trimmings. Now sponge off the outside of top, drying it with the gear chamois. Then, with plenty of water, use the finest sponge by pressing the water against the body until the dirt flows off. Do not rub the dirt into the varnish or get the sponge filled with it. After the dirt is washed off the body, dry it nicely with the damp chamois. Then wet the gear and wheels in a similar way. Do not scrape the mud off with a knife or chip. After washing till quite clear, dry nicely with the damp gear chamois. Wipe off any spots of water that are on the body.

Wash a new vehicle several times before using. By so doing you improve the lustre and durability of the varnish.

FOUR NEW WARSHIPS.

NISHING UP A BATCH OF MONITORS THAT WERE BEGUN SEVERAL YEARS AGO.

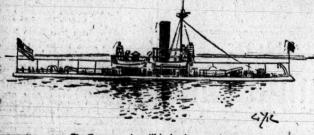

he "Terror" a Novelty-New Ideas in Marine Mechanics that Will Depend Upon Her Trials-Another Batch of Marine Cheese Boxes-The Enormous Guns They Will Carry.

(From a Special Contributor.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—(Special Correpondence.) Whether or not the war sloud on the oriental horizon has stimulated activity in that direction, the work of a number of Uncle Sam's new warabips as being pushed by the men in the navyards. The necessity for calling so many of our new cruisers into foreign waters at Washington to a realization of the fact that our harbors must not be left defenseless, and a batch of monitors started away back in the seventies is being finished up new for active service with the fast-growner. Over twenty years ago Congress appropriated more than $5,000,000 for the building of four monitors—twin ships of 260.

Over twenty years ago Congress appropriated more than $3,000,000 for the building of four monitors—twin ships of 260 feet each—to be known as the Amphitrite, Miantonomah, Monadnock and Terror. To this emibryo squadron was to be added a fifth vessel, planned after Erricson's seen tests of the machinery involved seem for the control of the c

The Terror, as she will look when completed.

Some of the ideas originally involved in the construction of these, the only double-turreted monitors in the navy, were revolutionized after the bulls were completed, and for some years their progress. If any had been contemplated, was checked, until changes had been decided upon.

When the plans had been remodeled work was again started.

The hulls of the Terror and the Puritan were towed to the New York navygard, at Brooklyn, about six years ago, and work has progressed on them spasmodically since then. The Amphitrite is being completed at the Norfolk navy-yard, while the Moradonock is progressing slowly at the Mare Island, navy-yard on the Pacific Coast. Since the big cruiser Maine was stunched and gotten well toward completion, the force of the yard has been concentrated upon the two monitors, which are now being completed rapidly.

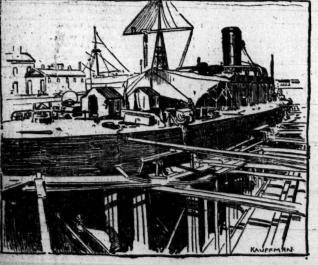

The Puritan has gone into the drydeck, which the Maine left, and the work of bolting on her thick steel plates has been taken up where it was left off several years ago. From her deck-line, which is only three feet out of water, to considerably below the water-line, the Puritan will be protected with the heaviest kind of armor. This will vary in thickness from fourteen inches to about eight inches between the level of the water, and the labor modived in fastening these slabs of iron to the hull is both long and tedious.

It is believed, however, that the larger of the two monitors will be finished and got or her trial trip withith six months. The enormous guns, which will be her failed weapons, lie at the side of the dock, along with the iron for her turrets. Two of the Puritan's eight bollers were taken out when she was remodeled, and new ones put in their places, but otherwise

One of the chief drawbacks urged against the building of monitors is their unseaworthiness, and the instance of the Miantonomah, whose turrets leaked so badly that she had to put in behind the Delaware. Breakwater for shelter, when caught in a storm on her way to the rendezvous for the big naval celebration at New York a few years ago, is given as an example. While the monitors are intended chiefly for harbor defense, and it is not intended to send them to sea any more than is absolutely necessary, every effort is being made to prevent a repetition of the Miantonomah's experience.

Practically, the only danger to that vessel was from the enormous leakage around the bottom of her turrets. When she started out to sea the big guns were lashed down, and the edges of the turrets packed. But the pounding of the great rifes when the storm came up, was so great that the turrets worked loose from the packing, and she took in water faster than it could be pumped out. To obviate this difficulty, a new system by which the heavy guns will be fastened in place when the ship rolls will be introduced. A new kind of rubber packing has also been devised that is said to be so efficacious that there is practically no danger from leakage on the new monitors, even if the decks are awash continually.

The hull of the Terror was built in 1874 by William Cramp & Sons at Philadelphia. Like all three of her sister ships she is 259 feet 6 inches long on the water line, and has a displacement of 3390 tons. Her extreme beam is 55 feet 10 inches and the mean draught 14 feet 6 inches. She has twin screws and inclined compound engines, showing an indicated capacity of 1600 horse-power. Her speed is intended to be twelve knots an hour, al-were originally put in her when she as first built. Her turrets, conning over, batteries and superstructure will be the first knowledge of whether she has exceeded or fallen below this requirement. Her coal bunkers will have a capacity of 322 tons.

The Terror is a little further on toward ormpletion, and it is thought that she fill be ready for her trial trips early in sopring—three months before the Purint. In case of necessity, that is, if war nould suddenly break out, or other hurse within a month. She is tied to the harf, where she has lain for years, and workmen are busy putting on her turned workmen will be in fitting up below the workmen will be in fitting up below

She will be more heavily armed than any other boat of her size ever built. In each of her great revolving turrets there will be two twelve-inch breech-loading rines, while she will also have six four-inch rapid-fire guns in her main battery. Her secondary battery will be composed of four three-pound rapid-fire guns, four $2-mm$. Hotchkiss revolving cannon and four Gatling guns.
